Steve Hackett
At The Edge Of Light

In Stores 25th January 2019

The legendary former Genesis guitarist Steve Hackett returns with his brand new studio album.

Limited CD + DVD Mediabook (incl. 5.1 surround sound mix & behind the scenes doc)
Standard CD Jewelcase / Gatefold Black 2LP + CD / Digital Album

Also available as limited UK exclusive gatefold white vinyl 2LP + CD, only from independent record shops

Steve Hackett & Band live in November 2019
21 dates across the UK – tickets and full list of dates available from MyTicket.co.uk

Available from amazon.co.uk
RIVAL SONS  "A TIDAL WAVE IS ABOUT TO UNLEASH, AND WE ABSOLUTELY FEEL PART OF IT" BE-BOP DELUXE  "MY GUITAR TECH POURED LIGHTER FLUID OVER MY GUITAR AND SET IT ON FIRE."

CLASSIC ROCK

GREGA VAN FLEET
A No.1 album. 4 Grammy nominations. Over 200 million streams...

MEET THE HOTTEST BAND ON THE PLANET

MOTÖRHEAD
40 YEARS ON. OVERKILL AND HOW IT SAVED THEM

PINK FLOYD
THE BIZARRE STORY OF ATOM HEART MOTHER

THE TOP 50 AOR ALBUMS OF ALL TIME
STARRING JOURNEY
FOREIGNER
BOSTON
SURVIVOR
HEART
TOTO
& MORE

THIS IS THE NEW WAVE OF CLASSIC ROCK
2019
THE YEAR ROCK STRIKES BACK!

INTERNET CONNECTION REQUIRED

ISSUE 258
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Album</th>
<th>Artist</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Weather Systems</td>
<td>Anathema</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Confessions of a Romance Novelist</td>
<td>The Anchoretts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Planets &amp; Persona</td>
<td>Richard Barbieri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackfield</td>
<td>Blackfield</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spooky Action</td>
<td>Paul Draper</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Soyuz</td>
<td>Gazpacho</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Not the Weapon but the Hand</td>
<td>Steve Hogarth &amp; Richard Barbieri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belighted</td>
<td>Iamthemorning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Under A Fragmented Sky</td>
<td>Lunatic Soul</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attack of the Grey Lantern</td>
<td>Mansun</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Séance of Dark Delusions</td>
<td>Nordic Giants</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grappling Hooks</td>
<td>North Atlantic Oscillation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lightdark</td>
<td>Nosound</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dissolution</td>
<td>The Pineapple Thief</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fear of a Blank Planet</td>
<td>Porcupine Tree</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wisdom of Crowds</td>
<td>Bruce Soord &amp; Jonas Renkse</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quantum Gate</td>
<td>Tangerine Dream</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sonder</td>
<td>Tesseract</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Butterfly</td>
<td>White Moth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Raven that Refused to Sing</td>
<td>Steven Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shimmer into Nature</td>
<td>Ed Wynne</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Together We're Stranger</td>
<td>Gleb Kolyadin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ramagehead</td>
<td>O.R.K.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Three Fact Fader</td>
<td>Engineers</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
24 Greta Van Fleet
Meet the new boss.
“We’re a bunch of kids who play rock’n’roll.”

Features

24 Greta Van Fleet
From out of nowhere and suddenly the most talked-about new guitar band around, they’re poised to take the baton from the old guard of rock greats and carry it into the future.

30 The New Wave Of Classic Rock
Far from being dead, ‘proper’ rock is having a real resurgence. We look at its recent rise, and at some of the artists poised to bring it on home.

34 Rival Sons
After years of hard graft and staying true to their retro musical vision, has their time finally come?

40 Motörhead
They arrived with barely an audience or a future. Then they released Overkill and boarded a rocket to the moon.

48 Be-Bop Deluxe
Mastermind Bill Nelson reflects on musical adventures, flaming guitars and taking glam to shocked “hard, butch miners”.

52 Thunder
Danny Bowes and Luke Morley talk Frank Sinatra, swampy blues, going a bit ‘jazz club’ and playing golf with Scott Gorham.

54 Pink Floyd
We look back at the tortuous creation of one of the band’s most overlooked but important releases: Atom Heart Mother.

63 The Greatest AOR Albums Ever
Celebrating the very best of AOR from the golden age of the 70s and 80s. We also go beyond the hits and the household names to shine a light on the era’s cult classics and lost heroes.

78 Marcus King Band
With influences from all points of the musical compass and playing experience way beyond his years, he initially found it “hard to get people to take me seriously”. But now they do.
40 Motörhead

“Too metal for punk, too punk for metal. Fk that, we were neither.”

---

10 The Dirt

The Queen film Bohemian Rhapsody scoops two Golden Globe nominations; Greta Van Fleet pick up a whopping four nominations for the 61st annual Grammy Awards; Motley Crüe’s film The Dirt arrives in March via Netflix; Axl Rose taken “severely ill” during a recent Guns N' Roses show in Abu Dhabi. The band are also rumoured to have been back in the studio… Welcome back Bernie Tormé, Electric Mary and Franke & The Knockouts, say hello to The Cold Stares and Puppy, say goodbye to Pete Shelley, Eddie C Campbell, Roy Bailey, Bill Caddick…

---

20 The Stories Behind The Songs

MC5

Kick Out The Jams was the incendiary call to arms that originally ignited punk’s vital spark in 60s Detroit.

---

22 Q&A Steve Morse

Deep Purple’s current guitarist on Blackmore’s blessing, dealing with the haters and why guitar is the best therapy.

---

87 Reviews

New albums from Rival Sons, Thunder, Venom, Within Temptation, Slim Chance, Dog Eat Dog, John Garcia And The Band Of Gold, The Bevis Frond... Reissues from Iron Maiden, Slipknot, Europe, Sammy Hagar, Man, Family, Procol Harum, Ian Dury & The Blockheads... DVDs, films and books on Alice Cooper, Black Sabbath, Fleetwood Mac, Nightwish... Live reviews of Def Leppard, Cheap Trick, The Wildhearts, Killing Joke, Dan Reed Network, Hawkwind…

---

98 Buyer’s Guide

Kscope Records

Which of the post-progressive label’s releases – including albums by Porcupine Tree, Steven Wilson, Anathema and North Atlantic Oscillation – should you own?

---

103 Live Previews

Must-see gigs from Inglorious, Mud Morganfield, Francis Dunnery, The Dandy Warhols and Mastodon. Plus full gig listings – find out who’s playing where and when.

---

122 The Soundtrack Of My Life

Myles Kennedy

The frontman with Alter Bridge and Slash’s band on the special records, artists and gigs that will forever be of lasting significance to him.

---

SUBSCRIBE, SAVE MONEY AND GET TWO FREE GIFTS!
Solo debut by Rock & Roll Hall Of Famer

REESE WYNANS
AND FRIENDS
SWEET RELEASE

Produced by Joe Bonamassa

WITH GUESTS PERFORMANCES BY:
SAM MOORE / KENNY WAYNE SHEPHERD / CHRIS LAYTON
TOMMY SHANNON / NOAH HUNT / WARRREN HAYNES / VINCE GILL
KEB’ MO’ / DOYLE BRAMHALL II / BONNIE BRAMLETT
JIMMY HALL / MIKE FARRIS / JOSH SMITH / PAULIE CERRA
JACK PEARSON / JOE BONAMASSA & OTHERS

Out 1 March, 2019!
Available on 2LP, CD and Digital

ERIC GALES
THE BOOKENDS

GUITAR WHIRLWIND
ERIC GALES IS BACK WITH A NEW FUNKY BLUES RECORD!

”ONE OF THE BEST, IF NOT THE BEST GUITAR PLAYER IN THE WORLD”

Out 8 February 2019!
Available on LP, CD & Digital

JONNY LANG • WALTER TROUT • KRIS BARRAS
04/06/2019 • THE O2 FORUM • LONDON

FOR TICKETS AND INFO:
www.rockintheblues.com / www.ticketmaster.co.uk
COMING SOON

LATEST ROCK CANDY MAGAZINE AVAILABLE NOW!
IN SHOPS AND ONLINE!

Issue 11 of Rock Candy Mag (December - January 2019) is now available, packed to bursting with amazing features and photos from rock’s greatest era.

SO WHAT’S INSIDE ISSUE 11?

• KING COE - THE VOICE OF DEEP PURPLE AND WHITESNAKE GIVES A PERSONAL INSIGHT INTO THE IMAGES THAT DEFINED HIS CAREER
• DIO - HOW ‘LOCK UP THE WOLVES’ DERAILED THE BAND
• REO SPEEDWAGON - THEIR LONG, HARD ROAD TO THE TOP
• RICK WAKEMAN - THE KEYBOARD LEGEND ON THE MADNESS OF MAKING ‘KING ARTHUR’...
• DAN REED - HE COULDN’T BE BOTHERED TO BE A SEX SYMBOL!
• ANTHRAX - “HOW THE HELL DID WE DO THAT?”
• NAZARETH - THE NON-METAL METAL BAND
• UFO - TESTAMENT’S CHUCK BILLY HAS SO MUCH LOVE FOR THE BRITISH ROCK ICONS
• HEART - RE-ANALYSING 1980’S ‘BEBE LE STRANGE’
AND NOT FORGETTING...
• ULI JON ROTH - HENDRIX, SCORPIONS AND VEGETARIANISM
• IRON MAIDEN - FROZEN IN TIME
AND MUCH MORE!

You can buy it in shops, including Whsmith in the UK and Barnes & Noble in the US, or purchase it through our website at www.rockcandyrec.com and get a free digital download www.rockcandyrec.com / info@rockcandyrec.com

AVAILABLE FROM ALL GOOD RECORD STORES OR DIRECTLY TO YOUR DOOR FROM WWW.ROCKCANDYREC.COM - LOOK OUT FOR SPECIAL OFFERS
here's definitely something in the air. And it's a good thing.

Last year, one of the biggest (and most surprising, if we're honest) stories was that of Greta Van Fleet. So much so that many of the established names we spoke to last issue for our Review Of 2018 were singing the band's praises unprompted.

It's been forever since a new rock band has caught the imagination of the wider world, racking up huge statistics of radio and streaming plays, Grammy Award nominations, No.1 singles, sold-out shows... The Darkness are probably the last band I can think of that really transcended the rock niche. But GVF, three siblings and their pal from Michigan, have managed the nearly impossible and are taking rock into the mainstream again. We spoke to the band and those at the eye of the GVF hurricane to discover more before they head back to the UK in a few weeks to consolidate their triumphant jaunt last November. Are they the new Led Zeppelin? You decide.

Speaking of Led Zeppelin, this month marks the 50th anniversary of not only the release of their debut album, but also of their first American tour. In celebration, this issue includes a special additional Led Zeppelin magazine, telling the story of Led Zeppelin I and taking an in-depth look at some of those first US shows. Enjoy!

Siân Llewellyn,
Editor

THE COVER: DOUG COOMBE
INGLORIOUS
Ride to Nowhere
Out on January 25 2019
THIRD ALBUM FROM THE UP & COMING UK ROCKERS inglorious.com

Tony Harnell
Magnus Karlsson
STARBREAKER
New Album from Tony Harnell (ex-TNT) & Magnus Karlsson (PRIMAL FEAR)
Out on January 25 2019
Available on CD, Digital www.tonyharnell.com
fb.com/magnus.karlsson.30746

KANE ROBERTS
THE NEW NORMAL
Out on January 25 2019
New studio album feat. guest appearances from Alice Cooper, Alissa White-Gluz, Kip Winger, Alfa Strauss & more.
Available as CD, Digital fb.com/KaneRobertspage

JET BOY
Born To Fly
First new studio album in nearly 3 decades.
Out on January 25 2019
Available on CD, Color LP, Digital jetboyrocks.com

FRONTIERS
SAT 2 FEB 2019 @ 5:00pm
UK FESTIVAL
O2 INSTITUTE BIRMINGHAM
ROCK
QUIET RIOT
Off Night in Milan
Blistering live set captured in Italy
Available on CD, DVD, Blu Ray, Digital
Out on January 25th 2013

Toby Hitchcock
RECKONING
New Album from Pride Of Lions singer.
Toby Hitchcock
fb.com/tobykhitcheck
Out on January 25th 2018
Available on CD, Digital
Tributes have been pouring in for Pete Shelley, the lead singer of Mancunian punk band Buzzcocks, who died of a suspected heart attack on December 6 at the age 63. Love, sadness, humour, passion – an outpouring of a personal grief, made more poignant because his music felt so secret and special to so many. As Stephen McRobbie, singer with Scotland's shy romantics The Pastels, puts it: “Always come back to them, to their deceptive simplicity, the brilliance of it all, the thrill. They were the way into punk and the way out of it.”

Born Peter McNeish in Leigh, Lancashire on April 17, 1955, Pete Shelley was the son of ex-mill worker and a colliery fitter. He began writing songs while attending Leigh Grammar School, and later bought a four-track tape recorder when he was studying for an HND electronics degree at Bolton Institute of Technology.

The first Buzzcocks gig I saw was at Chelmsford Odeon in 1978. It was late on for the group, who had already released two albums, but the show was sharp, edgy, acerbic. The first – and last – pop band I fell totally in love with were Buzzcocks. Their songs spoke directly to me: too sensitive to be classed alongside their swaggering male punk peers, too catchy yet they were clearly punk – coy and imaginative, naughtily and conflicted and pansexual. “[Pete] showed that you didn’t have to be political or angry to be punk,” says original Sex Pistols bassist Glen Matlock, true, although to me he always seemed both.

Buzzcocks formed in 1975, after Shelley saw an ad from fellow BIT student Howard Devoto (née Trafford) looking for musicians into the Velvet Underground song Sister Ray. In February 1976 the pair went to London to see the Sex Pistols play after reading a brief NME write-up of the punk band's first performance.

Impressed, Shelley and Devoto arranged the Pistols' first Manchester gig, at the Lesser Free Trade Hall on June 4, 1976. It has long been noted that the gig gestated the city's punk scene – only 42 people attended, but the A-side was the pop nugget ‘I Don’t Mind’ – the band’s best-known song, the Christmas No.1. Love, sadness, humour, passion – an outpouring of a personal grief, made more poignant because his music felt so secret and special to so many. As Stephen McRobbie, singer with Scotland’s shy romantics The Pastels, puts it: “Always come back to them, to their deceptive simplicity, the brilliance of it all, the thrill. They were the way into punk and the way out of it.”

By the end of 1976, Shelley had persuaded his dad to loan him £250 to pay for the pressing and recording of the first Buzzcocks EP, released in November 1977 and, unsurprisingly, wasn’t played on the BBC. Their second single had the abrupt one-finger salute Oh Shit as its B-side, but the A-side was the pop nugget What Do I Get?. Quickly, Buzzcocks found a natural home in both the charts and fledgling pop magazine Smash Hits. Their chart-bound singles – sharp, acerbic, bittersweet pop songs that rarely reached the three-minute mark – detailed conflict romance. “You spurn my natural emotions/You make me feel I’m dirt and I’m hurt,” Shelley sang on the No.1 hit Ever Fallen In Love (With Someone You Shouldn’t’ve). “I even think you hate me, when you call me on the phone;” he lamented on I Don’t Mind, in an unafraid, unapologetic way that few of his male peers managed. The fact that you never knew which gender he was addressing increased the poignancy. To this lonely Chelmsford boy, unable to understand the unspoken social protocols of boy-girl, boy-boy relationships and teenage love, his songs were panacea.

Prestige (No.20), theacidic, Brave New World-inspired Everybody’s Happy Nowadays (No.29) and Diggle’s Harmony In My Head (No.32) kept the hits coming. Shelley could do in 90 seconds what other bands couldn’t manage over entire albums – tell a story, reach your heart.

Over two short years, Buzzcocks released the albums Another Music In A Different Kitchen and Love Bites (both 1978) and A Different Kind Of Tension (79). So much, so soon. Indeed so fast that by the time I saw them play again, in 1979, it almost felt like they’d burnt themselves out, so brightly did their star shine. All three were flawless, despite criticism raised at the time that the second was patchy (name me just one weak song!) and the last one too experimental. Apparently.

After the band split in 1980, Shelley began work on a solo album with Martin Rushent, the producer who’d shaped the Buzzcocks’ pop-punk sound. The result was the synth-pop single Homosapien – which should have been massive, but the BBC took issue with its mischievous homo-eroticism – and an album of the same name. Other solo albums followed, notably 1983’s XI. With its minimalist Telephone Operator, his solo career never really took off. Perhaps Shelley was too modest.

In 1989, Buzzcocks re-formed, initially as a touring band, and released a series of albums, beginning with Trade Test Transmissions (1993), all of which had their moments but none of which matched the band’s glorious initial explosion. For, as Shelley sang bittersweet on stage thousands of times, ‘I’m on a wave of nostalgia, for an age yet to come’. Notably, in 1994 Kurt Cobain asked the band to support Nirvana on what would turn out to be Nirvana’s final tour. The link between the two sensitive, almost reluctant stars is palpable.

In 2012 Pete Shelley went to live in Tallinn, Estonia with his second wife, Greta. He is survived by his younger brother Gary. Greta and a son from his first marriage.

There is a campaign to make Ever Fallen In Love (With Someone You Shouldn’t’ve), the band’s best-known song, the Christmas No.1. Let’s hope it succeeds. Because we all did, didn’t we?
After a year of touring together as The Devon Allman Project With Special Guest Duane Betts, the sons of Gregg Allman and Dickey Betts have formed the Allman Betts Band. The line-up adds Berry Oakley Jr., the son of ABB bassist Berry Oakley, Former Brothers and current Rolling Stones keyboard player Chuck Leavell is set to guest on a new Allman Betts Band album that’s due in the spring.

As this issue went to press, Styx announced a one-off UK date. The veteran US pop-rockers play London Palladium on June 4. It’s the band’s first headline show here since 2005.

Expanded Animals “eventually”, says Mason

Nick Mason believes that a box set celebrating Pink Floyd’s 1977 album Animals seems likely to be released at some point in the future. The group’s The Early Years 1965–1972 box set was released in 2016, and then split into six individual volumes in March last year. Asked about the possibility of Animals receiving a similar release, the drummer told Rolling Stone: “I think it will eventually happen. It’s just slow because of differences of opinion about how to do it or what to put on it, but I’m sure it will eventually happen. Of all our albums that have been re-released, that’s the one that would benefit the most from a sort of reworking.”

After well-received shows in 2018, Mason and his band Nick Mason’s Saucerful Of Secrets have more dates lined up across the UK and North America in 2019, where they will again see them revisit early Floyd material, including songs from The Piper At The Gates Of Dawn and A Saucerful Of Secrets.

asked in the same interview about any plans to perform other pre-The Dark Side Of The Moon songs at the shows, and specifically Echoes, Mason responded: “Well, the problem with Echoes is there was a feeling that it has so much to do with Rick Wright [Floyd’s keyboard player, who died in 2008] that we wanted to steer clear of it. In the long term we might look at that, because it’s a wonderful piece, an homage to Rick. It’s something that we’ve talked about, but not personally addressed.”

Mason also speculated about the possibility of Roger Waters joining Saucerful Of Secrets on stage in the future, but cautioned: “Roger says that he might come and guest for a song or two, but I’m not holding my breath on that. We can worry about guest stars when we are a bit further down the line.” DL

Mac Court Case Over

Lindsey Buckingham says he won’t “twist the knife”.

Lindsey Buckingham’s lawsuit with Fleetwood Mac has been settled. The guitarist/vocalist was fired last year due to a scheduling conflict revolving around a world tour. He will be replaced for the shows by Heartbreakers guitarist Mike Campbell and Crowded House leader Neil Finn.

Buckingham was sacked just days after appearing with Mac at a Grammy MusicCares event, and subsequently filed papers that claimed a lost income of up to $14 million. The band’s response was terse and to the point: “Fleetwood Mac looks forward to their day in court.”

Speaking on the popular US news programme This Morning recently, Buckingham revealed that the matter has been resolved. Asked whether the outcome was satisfactory from his point of view, he responded: “I’m happy enough with it. I’m not out there trying to twist the knife at all. I’m trying to look at this with some level of compassion and some level of wisdom.”

Buckingham said he had discovered he was out of the band during a phone call with manager, Irving Azoff, who told him that Stevie Nicks hadn’t been happy with him at the MusicCares event, and had accused Buckingham of smirking behind her back during her acceptance speech.

“It appeared to me that she was looking for something to hang on me in order to instigate some kind of a coup,” Buckingham said. “Irving Azoff told me days later that she’d given the band an ultimatum, and either I had to go or she would.” DL

Eddie C Campbell
May 6, 1939 – November 20, 2018

Born in Mississippi 79 years ago, by the time he was 12 Eddie C Campbell was sitting in with Muddy Waters’s band. The guitarist/singer was a sideman for Howlin’ Wolf, Little Walter, Little Johnny Taylor and Jimmy Reed, before Willie Dixon pulled him into the Chicago Blues All-Stars in 1976.

Roy Bailey
October 20, 1935 – November 20, 2018

Known for a socially aware style of folk, Londoner Roy Bailey began his career in a skiffle band in 1959. He received an MBE, but returned it six years later in protest against British support of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. He was 83.

Scott English
January 10, 1937 – November 16, 2018

Scott English was probably best known for having written the song “Brandy”, which became a hit for Barry Manilow as “Mandy”. New Yorker English also co-wrote the Jeff Beck hit Hi Hi Silver Living. English was 81 years old at the time of his passing.

Bill Caddick
June 27, 1944 – November 19, 2018

A staple of the British folk-rock scene, singer, guitarist and songwriter Bill Caddick found fame with the Albion Band and went on to form the splinter group Home Service in 1980. In 2000 he pursued a solo career as well as running a folk club. Caddick was 74 at the time of his death.

Eddie Reeves
November 17, 1939 – November 18, 2018

Texan Eddie Reeves pursued a diverse career in music, working as a songwriter, recording artist, music publisher, artist manager, record company executive and author. His compositions were recorded by Sonny & Cher, Ray Charles and Kenny Rogers, among others. Reeves was 79 when he died due to a stroke.

Peter Simon
Died November 18, 2018

Photographer Peter Simon took some of the most iconic images of the Grateful Dead, having shot them live for the first time in 1969. The brother of the singer Carly Simon, Peter photographed many musicians and celebrities of the era. He succumbed to a fatal cardiac arrest. He was 71.
BUTLIN'S PROUDLY PRESENTS
THE GREAT BRITISH ALTERNATIVE
MUSIC FESTIVAL
2019, MINEHEAD RESORT
WITH LIVE PERFORMANCES FROM

SKIDS
THE UNDERTONES
PETER HOOK & THE LIGHT
BIG COUNTRY
BLACKHEAD
FROM THE JAM
THE REZILLOS
HAZEL O'CONNOR
TOYAH
NEVILLE STAPLE BAND
THE MEMBERS
THE LAMBRETTAS
PLUS MANY MORE

3 NIGHTS ACCOMMODATION FROM £95PP
SEASIDE LOCATION

Visit BIGWEEKENDS.COM or call on 0330 100 9742

Prices shown are per person per break based on four sharing for 3-night breaks. Prices are correct at time of print on 31.12.2018 but are subject to availability. All offers are subject to promotional availability and may be withdrawn at any time and cannot be combined with any other offer or internet code except the 5% Premier Club loyalty discount. For full terms and conditions please visit bigweekends.com/terms. Calls to 03 numbers are charged at standard UK rates and may vary from mobiles. These calls are included in any inclusive packages. Butlin's Skyline Limited, 5 Park Lane, Hamble, Hampshire, HP12 4LJ. Registered in England No. 04065665.
Killer Queen
Bohemian Rhapsody scoops Golden Globe nominations.

QUEEN’S BOHEMIAN RHAPSODY film has been nominated in two categories for 2019's prestigious Golden Globes Awards. Already acknowledged as the biggest-selling music biopic of all time, the film is in the running to win the Best Motion Picture – Drama category, while its star, the 37-year-old Rami Malek, is shortlisted for Best Performance By An Actor In A Motion Picture – Drama.

Queen guitarist Brian May believes that Ramek’s performance as Freddie Mercury is deserving of an Oscar nomination, but in the Golden Globes he’s up against Bradley Cooper (A Star Is Born), Willem Dafoe (At Eternity’s Gate), Lucas Hedges (Boy Erased) and John David Washington (BlackKklansman); while Bohemian Rhapsody goes head-to-head with Black Panther, BlacKkklansman, If Beale Street Could Talk and A Star Is Born. The winners will be announced on January 6.

In more awards news, Greta Van Fleet have picked up a whopping four nominations for the 61st annual Grammy Awards. The fast-rising American newcomers are nominated in the categories of Best New Artist, Best Rock Performance, Best Rock Song and Best Rock Album. Others in the running include Halestorm, the late Chris Cornell, Alice In Chains, Ghost, Buddy Guy, Weezer, Bring Me The Horizon, Trivium and Guns N’ Roses. The latter’s special edition of Appetite For Destruction is among the contenders for the Best Boxed Or Special Limited Edition Package. The winners in all categories will be announced on February 10.

The Winery Dogs, the US hard-rock power trio featuring guitarist/vocalist Richie Kotzen, bassist Billy Sheehan and drummer Mike Portnoy, will undertake a US tour in May. It’s the group’s first live dates in almost three years. Kotzen says: “Of course there will be a new record! I’m not going to tell you when, because I want it to be a surprise.”

Guitarist Vivian Campbell says to expect changes on the second record from Last In Line, the group formed by former members of Dio. It’s the group’s first release since the death of bassist Jimmy Bain, who is replaced by Phil Soussan: “Its songs are more developed, with more parts and more experimentation,” explains Campbell. The album is released on February 22. A new phone app will enable fans to view hundreds of items featured in the recent David Bowie Is exhibition. From January 8 – on what would have been the singer’s 72nd birthday – they can download the augmented reality app on iOS and Android and enjoy the vast collection from the comfort of their home. The app will also include dozens of items that were not included in the original exhibition.

Queen’s Bohemian Rhapsody film The Dirt, based on their 2002 book The Dirt: Confessions Of The World’s Most Notorious Rock Band is set to arrive on March 22. Crue frontman Vince Neil confirmed the news on Twitter, revealing: "Wow! Just left Netflix offices. Just saw The Dirt movie! Fuckin’ awesome! Can’t wait for everyone to see it! [It]’s released March 22. Yeah!" Motley Crue producer Bob Rock to record four new original songs for the production, which has been a work in progress since the summer of 2016. Directed by Jeff Tremaine, of Jackass fame, The Dirt stars Daniel Webber as Neil, Douglas Booth as bassist Nikki Sixx, Machine Gun Kelly as drummer Tommy Lee and Iwan Rheon as guitarist Mick Mars, with David Constable as Crue manager Doc McGhee.

In a video statement, Saxon (pictured) claim that on their 40th-anniversary tour this year “the band will be back with their largest, loudest, brightest, most explosive show ever.” Dates are yet to be confirmed.

Ian Gillan, Ozzy Osbourne and Twisted Sister frontman Dee Snider have one thing in common – they’ve all worked with Irish born guitarist Bernie Tormé. He was a member of the most celebrated line-up of Gillan, the man Ozzy turned to when Randy Rhoads died, and a collaborator with Snider in the short lived Desperado. But that is just part of his story. In the past four decades Tormé has been in numerous other bands—including Atomic Rooster to the Electric Gypsies – and enjoyed a successful solo career. More recently he released the double album Shadowland which combines punk, blues and metal in Tormé’s inimitable style. And he’s finished what he says is his first tour. So is retirement looming?

Why have you decided that this is your last tour? I’ve done four albums in four years, and toured them all. Honestly, I’m knackered, and need a year or two off. After that I’ll think about playing live again. But I am not keen to do more club tours. It will have to be occasional shows and festival appearances. In the next couple of years I might record, so I’m not fully retiring from music.

You got fans to send in music via Pledge, which you then incorporated into the track Innovative Jam/Chaos Theory on your new album. How much of a challenge was that? It was scary. I came up with the basic track, and then got nine or ten people to send me something. They all did the same part, and each were told to go mad at the end. It was three days of hell to mix, but it came out well.

You worked with your former Gillan bandmate Colin Towns on the new album. Did that throw up any idea of a Gillan reunion? I would love it. I think we owe it to the fans. But I doubt it will happen. I haven’t talked to Ian since 1993, but he has told me he’s still angry and bitter about the way Gillan ended. And I know Colin is also against the idea. It has to be everyone, or it’s not worth doing. So there seems to be no chance.

Looking back, how tough was it for you to step into Randy Rhoads’ shoes in Ozzy’s band? I cannot explain how hard it was. It was such a sad and dark time. I knew Ozzy didn’t want me there, because all he wanted to do was stop touring. Everyone was very happy, but I was thrown into the middle of their emotional turmoil. They would look at me and were almost saying: ‘He’s not Randy.’ It changed me. Before that I wanted to be a rock star, but afterwards I didn’t care at all.

Do you feel that you’re underrated? That never bothers me. I’m not someone who needs that sort of attention. I care about the music, and not how highly other people rate my guitar work.

You’ve worked with some huge personalities. Do you feel comfortable as a foil to those kinds of people? I’m quite a shy person, so it’s been good to have someone with a huge mouth like Ozzy. Ian or Dee, because it meant I didn’t need to talk. All of them are lovely people in their different ways. The person I enjoyed working with the most was Dee. What an amazing character – he is Mister Entertainment, and had so many great ideas for songs.

Shadowland is out now via PledgeMusic.
"When we played for the first time, the crowd looked like they'd just witnessed a murder."

The Cold Stares

Bludgeoning their audiences, this is one alt.blues duo you can’t take your eyes off.

The Cold Stares thrive on low expectations. The Indiana-based duo like nothing better than a sea of disinterested faces at their gigs, and buzz off the support slots that make lesser bands sweat. That just makes it even sweeter when Chris Tapp fires up his battery of amps, Brian Mullins takes a seat behind his monster kick drum and all hell is unleashed.

“We’ve opened for so many big bands where people haven’t come to see us,” says Tapp. “And I’m proud when we get the open mouths. Our live show is brutal. When we played together for the first time, the crowd looked like they’d just witnessed a murder.”

That jaw-dropping live prowess – along with songs that fuse smoky southern blues with jackhammer alt.rock – quickly elevated The Cold Stares above the pack after Tapp and Mullins formed the band in their native Kentucky.

“This band became official in 2011,” recalls the frontman. “There was a contest at the Hard Rock Café. The guy running the place suckered us into doing it, and we ended up winning the damn thing. After that we were on the news and on television. So we were like: ‘Shit, I guess we’d better put something together…’”

But that fantastical start was cut short.

“We had labels like Island Records and Hollywood Records flying in to see us,” says Tapp, “and people interested in signing us. Then I found out I had cancer. And that knocked all that out. We had about two and a half years that we were pretty much sidetracked. But that was part of our story. And after going through chemo and radiation, and getting past it, we ended up getting another record deal and kept it going.”

While writing their latest album, Mountain, Tapp channelled those dark times. The stormy slide-blues of Wade In The Darkness references his illness, while the haunted Killing Machine bemoans the culture of violence swallowing their nation (“It goes through different wars and the slaughter of American Indians,” Tapp explains). But on the flip-side, moments like foot-down rocker The Great Unknown capture the rush of being young, alive and recording in Los Angeles. “Nobody ever went to LA to make a record and got a good night’s sleep,” Mullins offers. “That was never part of the dream.”

“We were out there in EastWest Studios,” Tapp recalls. “We rented a Porsche and a Corvette and raced around the Hollywood Hills. After going through cancer, you want to live. And we lived. You're on this rock just a short time, and the purpose of being here is not always clear. I think you have to make every day something.”

That new-found philosophy perhaps explains why The Cold Stares are sworn to ride the momentum of Mountain as far as it takes them. And if that means there’s a little more expectation surrounding the duo, then so be it. “We gotta make a good run with this record,” Tapp says. “This is the big one.”

Mountain is out now via OurFans Records.
ENGLAND

England, Deroy, UK 1976. £1,000.

Deroy was a Lancashire-based recording service, enabling unsigned artists to release custom recordings to vinyl at their own expense, usually manufactured in extremely limited runs of 99 copies. Although a small label, Deroy released some of the most sought after UK recordings of the 60s and 70s.

One of their most acknowledged releases is this excellent album by London-based power-trio England. Originally formed by guitarist/vocalist Olly Alcock in the Cumbrian town of Kendal in 1971, they embarked on a life on the road. But despite building up a dedicated following, a major-label deal wasn’t forthcoming.

England follows an unconventional line somewhere between early progressive hard rock and pub rock, while displaying fragments of early NWOBHM, which might have made them seem somewhat out of place at the time. But there’s some fine and fluid musicianship here, particularly in Alcock’s stunning guitar work. Opening track The Osprey, is a particular highlight, showcasing a heady blend funky hard rock with complex jazz guitar motifs, topped off with Alcock’s distinctly gravelly vocals. How Does It Feel follows a similar path, while Beauty & The Beast, is an infectious prog party number, complete with sax. Paradise Lost is harder hitting, yet never overdoes on heaviness, much like the rest of the album.

A competent and enjoyable album, which just lacks a little spark. LD

‘Somewhere between early progressive hard rock and pub rock.’

Now into its twelfth year, Record Store Day this year takes place on Saturday, April 13. Hundreds of limited-edition vinyl releases will be created exclusively for the occasion, and free live performances and parties are set to take place in 240 independent record shops up and down the country. More at recordstoresday.co.uk

Kate Bush has had Rolf Harris’s name removed from the recently remastered edition of her 2005 album Atom, Kate’s son, Albert ‘Bertie’ McIntosh, who performed Harris’s spoken-word part at her live shows, is credited on the new edition. Harris was found guilty of 12 counts of sexual assault in 2014.

Following their support slots with Deep Purple, Status Quo and Thunder, Cats In Space release their third studio album on March 8. It includes the 27-minute conceptual epic The Story Of Johnny Rocket.

When they burst out of the Melbourne circuit in 2004 – all hooky riff-raff and bloke-next-door charm – Aussies Electric Mary seemed like a band on the up, and so it proved for three albums. But after 2011’s III the band hit personnel bumps and fell into a studio drought, ended only by this year’s thumping Mother. Rusty Brown gives us the real story behind their long absence.

How come we’ve been waiting eight years for Mother?

Well, between 2011 and now we’ve lost two drummers. They keep exploding. This album probably could have been out in the middle of 2018, but I got ill, and I had to make sure I was right to be able to finish it.

What kind of illness I don’t want to say.

How did the recording go?

I used to write all the songs and the band would play them. But [this time], there’s a song called Gimme Love, the songwriter’s got a lot of ideas. And that’s usually the death knell for a drummer, but his ideas are pretty good, actually. All our songs have all our names on them, we don’t do percentages.

Because the percentages thing kills a lot of bands, doesn’t it?

Of course. Y’know, the songwriter’s got a four-storey house in every country and the drummer’s got a caravan.

Was Mother an easy album to make?

If I’m honest, everything that could go wrong has gone wrong. I possibly may have lost a friendship out of it, because in the end it was mixed by somebody else and not the guy who started doing it. It just wasn’t happening in the studio. It just wasn’t coming back how I thought it was sounding. Probably the blame for that lays at my feet for not being together.

What are the songs about?

Gimme Love is a strange one: I’d watched a movie about incest, How Do You Do It, about a guy meeting a prostitute in a bar, is total fiction. Woman is self-explanatory. I’m not too good with women. Lots of women in my life I haven’t seen eye-to-eye with.

Are you disappointed that you don’t attract strippers and hookers?

Really, to me, that’s shit. There are people that still believe it. Actually, one of the bands we’re friends with, I think they still believe in that – go out and get smashed and have sex with as many girls as you can.

There’s a song called Sorry Baby. What did you do?

Well, I’m actually saying: “I’m sorry for you, because you’re such an arsehole.”

I interviewed you in 2011 and you said you hadn’t made any money.

What’s the situation now?

What’s ten per cent of nothing? Nah, we haven’t made any money.

‘We seem to attract girls that want to mother us.’

Is that because the music always comes first for you?

Yeah, rock’n’roll is my girlfriend.

What kind of women do Electric Mary attract?

We seem to attract girls that want to mother us. When we tour Europe, there’s always somebody who wants to look after us, cook us a home-cooked meal.

Marillion keyboard player Mark Kelly (pictured) suffered four broken ribs after a Lancashire-based recording service, enabling unsigned artists to release custom recordings to vinyl at their own expense, usually manufactured in extremely limited runs of 99 copies. Although a small label, Deroy released some of the most sought after UK recordings of the 60s and 70s.

ENGLAND

England, Deroy, UK 1976. £1,000.

Originally formed by guitarist/vocalist Olly Alcock in the Cumbrian town of Kendal in 1971, they embarked on a life on the road. But despite building up a dedicated following, a major-label deal wasn’t forthcoming.

England follows an unconventional line somewhere between early progressive hard rock and pub rock, while displaying fragments of early NWOBHM, which might have made them seem somewhat out of place at the time. But there’s some fine and fluid musicianship here, particularly in Alcock’s stunning guitar work. Opening track The Osprey, is a particular highlight, showcasing a heady blend funky hard rock with complex jazz guitar motifs, topped off with Alcock’s distinctly gravelly vocals. How Does It Feel follows a similar path, while Beauty & The Beast, is an infectious prog party number, complete with sax. Paradise Lost is harder hitting, yet never overdoes on heaviness, much like the rest of the album.

A competent and enjoyable album, which just lacks a little spark. LD

‘Somewhere between early progressive hard rock and pub rock.’

When they burst out of the Melbourne circuit in 2004 – all hooky riff-raff and bloke-next-door charm – Aussies Electric Mary seemed like a band on the up, and so it proved for three albums. But after 2011’s III the band hit personnel bumps and fell into a studio drought, ended only by this year’s thumping Mother. Rusty Brown gives us the real story behind their long absence.

How come we’ve been waiting eight years for Mother?

Well, between 2011 and now we’ve lost two drummers. They keep exploding. This album probably could have been out in the middle of 2018, but I got ill, and I had to make sure I was right to be able to finish it.

What kind of illness I don’t want to say.

How did the recording go?

I used to write all the songs and the band would play them. But [this time], there’s a song called Gimme Love, the songwriter’s got a lot of ideas. And that’s usually the death knell for a drummer, but his ideas are pretty good, actually. All our songs have all our names on them, we don’t do percentages.

Because the percentages thing kills a lot of bands, doesn’t it?

Of course. Y’know, the songwriter’s got a four-storey house in every country and the drummer’s got a caravan.

Was Mother an easy album to make?

If I’m honest, everything that could go wrong has gone wrong. I possibly may have lost a friendship out of it, because in the end it was mixed by somebody else and not the guy who started doing it. It just wasn’t happening in the studio. It just wasn’t coming back how I thought it was sounding. Probably the blame for that lays at my feet for not being together.

What are the songs about?

Gimme Love is a strange one: I’d watched a movie about incest, How Do You Do It, about a guy meeting a prostitute in a bar, is total fiction. Woman is self-explanatory. I’m not too good with women. Lots of women in my life I haven’t seen eye-to-eye with.

Are you disappointed that you don’t attract strippers and hookers?

Really, to me, that’s shit. There are people that still believe it. Actually, one of the bands we’re friends with, I think they still believe in that – go out and get smashed and have sex with as many girls as you can.

There’s a song called Sorry Baby. What did you do?

Well, I’m actually saying: “I’m sorry for you, because you’re such an arsehole.”

I interviewed you in 2011 and you said you hadn’t made any money.

What’s the situation now?

What’s ten per cent of nothing? Nah, we haven’t made any money.

‘We seem to attract girls that want to mother us.’

Is that because the music always comes first for you?

Yeah, rock’n’roll is my girlfriend.

What kind of women do Electric Mary attract?

We seem to attract girls that want to mother us. When we tour Europe, there’s always somebody who wants to look after us, cook us a home-cooked meal.

Marillion keyboard player Mark Kelly (pictured) suffered four broken ribs after a truck while out jogging in Germany before Christmas. The band played that night's show in Essen without Kelly, but he was back on stage with them 24 hours later.

Accept have vowed to continue “full steam ahead” despite the decision of their original bass player Peter Baltes to quit the band. “Peter needed a change in his life and we wish him all the best,” said a statement.
WALTER TROUT

SURVIVOR BLUES

WALTER PAYS TRIBUTE TO HIS FAVORITE BLUES HEROES

Out 25 January, 2019! On LTD Orange 2LP, 2LP, CD and Digital Live 04/06/2019 - O2 Forum London - Rockinthebluesfestival

JONNY LANG • WALTER TROUT • KRIS BARRAS
04/06/2019 • THE O2 FORUM • LONDON

FOR TICKETS AND INFO:
WWW.ROCKINTHEBLUES.COM / WWW.TICKETMASTER.CO.UK
Neil Young has branded next summer’s Hyde Park show with Bob Dylan a “massive fuck up”, claiming that the announcement was made without his knowledge. Young’s ire is rooted in a number of issues, including disapproval of the event’s main sponsor: “Barclays Bank [are] a fossil fuel-funding entity [and] that doesn’t work for me. Will the show go ahead with Young? Watch this space.”

Megadeth release their sixteenth studio album in the spring. The band have been working hard on the follow-up to 2016’s Dystopia, and leader Dave Mustaine says that its scheduling is “probably ninety-five per cent certain”. Mustaine also reckons that the Big Four of thrash – Metallica, Megadeth, Anthrax and Slayer – should play live together once more before the latter band’s retirement. “I think everyone in the metal community wants to see that,” he states.

The Toto guitarist relives the moment he fell for the loveable mop tops.

“When my mother was pregnant with me, this psychic friend put her hands on my mom’s tummy and said: ‘It’s a boy. He hears the music. When he’s seven years old, I heard The Beatles, got a guitar, it changed my life, and here I am. So that’s freaky shit – I wasn’t even born and it was all figured out.’”

The Knockouts

The songwriting ace on smash hits, showbiz idiocy and Bon Jovi stealing his band.

Franke Previte never tires of discussing the globe-straddling smash that has trailed him since 1987. But to dwell on the 72-year-old’s inescapable Dirty Dancing theme, (I’ve Had) The Time Of My Life, would be to cruelly overlook his zinging early-80s work as leader of New Jersey pop-soul-rockers, Franke & The Knockouts. A new compilation including rarities has just been released, and a dollar from each sale will go to the Pancreatic Cancer Action Network. Previte tells us about the band’s rise and fall.

The Knockouts have a reputation as a ‘lost’ band. What happened?

“We were on Millennium/RCA for our first two records, and that label really got behind us. Then we went to MCA and they said: ‘We’re gonna make you sound like Night Ranger. We’re gonna take a song off the third record, have Night Ranger’s producer produce it and see what radio thinks.’ So they put out a song called Outrages, radio gave it the thumbs-down, so did MCA, and that was kinda it for us. It’s frustrating, because you have your whole life wrapped up in your art, then all of a sudden, you find yourself selling cars out of your driveway.

So what will we find on the The Complete Collection?

“I call my songs my kids, so this collection is my chance for my kids to get out there and play. For twenty-eight bucks you can get all the records, eleven unreleased songs, plus six live tracks. To me, those were my favourite versions of the Knockouts songs, because they just kick ass more. The energy of ten thousand people cheering for you gives you a different energy than standing there in a fishbowl, recording.

MCA said: ‘We’re gonna make you sound like Night Ranger.’”

Did you cross paths with Bon Jovi on the New Jersey circuit?

“Jon used to follow our band around. Y’know, he’d come up afterwards and say: ‘Oh, you’re my favourite singer.’ Many years later, I was having dinner in Asbury Park and this guy comes up and says: ‘Hey Franke, how are ya? I was the original road manager for Jon Bon Jovi. You know why we followed you around?’ I thought he was gonna say: ‘Because we loved the band.’”

Is it flattering or annoying when journalists still ask about that song?

“Winning an Academy Award, a Golden Globe, ASCAP song of the year, a Grammy nomination… it’s beyond my frickin’ dreams as a songwriter. I got to hang with [Dirty Dancing star] Patrick Swayze at the Academy Awards and he told me: ‘We were getting ready to do that last scene to a Lionel Richie track, but the last cassette came in and it was you. We knew then that we were gonna make a great movie.’ Swazye died of pancreatic cancer in 2009. Is that why you’re donating to that charity? I’ve been selling demos on my Facebook page for ten years, and I’ve raised about thirty thousand dollars for the Pancreatic Cancer Action Network. So I thought here’s another great opportunity with me putting out this collection. If you want to not buy my record, it’s cool, but just donate to them, that’s even better. HY

The Complete Collection is out now via Friday Music. Donate at pancan.org
Some people will do anything for their art. Which is why London-based three-piece Puppy found themselves spending an exhausting day lugging an entire camera rig and back line up and down a mine shaft while making a DIY video for their song Beast, all in the name of creative control.

“We’re control freaks,” explains singer/guitarist Jock Norton. “It was one of the worst days of our lives, but then we saw the video back and we were glad we did it. But we’ve decided to stay out of mine shafts for the rest of our musical career. That was our drummer Billy’s idea. We didn’t talk to him for a couple of days after it. We’ve always been in our own little world and done everything for ourselves, so when we signed with Spinefarm we were keen to keep up with that, because we know we’ll get something we like at the end of the day.”

It’s a love of the Beastie Boys and a childhood spent obsessively watching music videos on MTV that’s inspired their visual side, but the musical touchstones are clearly signposted too. Puppy – completed by drummer Billy Howard and bassist Will Michael – have a magpie’s eye for treasure and an infectious sense of fun, which come together in their debut full-length album The Goat, an unlikely but winning combination of grunge melodies, power-pop choruses and metal riffs. With nods to Weezer, Pantera, Helmet, Foo Fighters and a whole lot more besides, it feels like it’s travelled through time from the height of the 90s.

“We lost any desire to fit in anywhere musically. We just kept pushing ourselves.”

With Michael joining old school friends Norton and Howard three years ago after an apprenticeship in doom and stoner bands, Puppy represented their chance to break free of restrictions, deliberately, determinedly and joyfully failing to fit in with any current scene, which means they’ve been able to tour with bands as diverse as Kvelertak, King 810 and CKY.

“They say that every dog has its day, and Puppy’s may well have arrived.”

The Goat is out on January 25 via Spinefarm Records.
Detroit's Motor City 5 were a force of nature. An explosive collision of high-energy rock'n'roll, psychedlyclined free jazz, radical left-wing politics, soul-driven R&B showband steps, acid-expanded consciousness and revolutionary sparking raw power.

Having ripped through the Detroit live scene like wildfire, the band released a pair of independent singles across a two-year period (I Can Only Give You Everything b/w One Of The Guys, Looking At You b/w Borderline) through Trans Love Energies on AMG and A-Square respectively. Repeat pressings and a burgeoning reputation for live shows that combined the spiritual with the seditious soon attracted Elektra Records, who signed the band in '68.

But the 5’s essential magic wasn’t best served within the cold confinement of a recording studio, as guitarist Wayne Kramer explains: “Playing live was what we did best. Most bands did three albums and then a live album, so we thought we’d be revolutionary and break out with a live album first. It also worked better for the label. MC5 didn’t know how to work in the studio, so a studio record could have cost Elektra a fortune and been a lengthy, grueling process.”

Consequently, the Kick Out The Jams album was recorded live at Detroit’s Grande Ballroom across two nights on October 30 and 31, 1968 and captured the band at their most inspired and inspiring. From Brother JC Crawford’s rattle-rousing opening “testimonial” rap, through the libertine excesses of Come Together, the proto-punk ack-ack assault of Rocket Reducer No.62 and the taut, zeitgeist-mirroring passion of Motor City Is Burning to the spiralling space-rock blaze of Starship (co-credited to Sun Ra), it delivers sweat, volume and passion in spades, but is probably best remembered for its notorious title track with its unforgettably controversial introductory exhortation to “Kick out the jams, motherfuckers!”

Before we deal with the repercussions of Motherfucker, which we surely must, let’s examine the story behind the song behind the profanity. At this point in time every one of the band’s original compositions was simply credited to ‘MC5’, but who actually wrote it?

“We were commune-ists,” Kramer says laughing. “We had this all-for-one, one-for-all… I hesitate to call it a business structure. We just saw ourselves as one unit, but it was [vocalist and lyricist] Rob Tyner and I that wrote Kick Out The Jams in the kitchen, smoking a joint.”

KOTJ still sounds like a statement of intent. A forthright four-word manifesto, hammered home with an attention-grabbing, exclamatory ‘motherfucker’.

“Tyner was really speaking to us, the rest of the band. Sometimes I was critical of him, and what he’s saying is: ‘Let me be who I am’. Because who he was was fantastic. He was your dream lead singer, and he wrote lyrics that work so well, on so many levels. What do we mean when we say ‘Kick out the jams’? If you’re going to do anything, do it full measure, don’t equivocate, be all the way in.”

On another level, KOTJ is an entirely punk statement. Possibly the first, eight years prior to the Sex Pistols, here was an exhortation to set aside complacent noodling for short, sharp shock. To quite literally kick out ‘the jams’, of which there were plenty in the MC5’s contemporaneous late-60s music scene, not least from the Grateful Dead.

“They were the recipients of much of our harassment,” Kramer says. “All those San Francisco bands, we were tough on everybody. This was the era of the twenty-minute guitar solo, the forty-minute drum solo. The MC5’s roots are in Little Richard and Chuck Berry. That’s where we were based and everything grew from there, and we went from Little Richard to Sun Ra, all wrapped up in the era of Vietnam, civil rights and youth rebellion.”

And so to the ‘motherfucker’ of the matter. It was certainly a noun that provoked a reaction. So how quickly did the situation escalate from offended Elektra executives to the MC5 being dropped by the label?

“In the blink of an eye,” says Kramer. “We knew ‘Kick out the jams, motherfucker’ was never going to get played on the radio, so we recorded a ‘Kick out the jams, brothers and sisters’ version for the single. We instructed Elektra to wait until it peaked in the chart before releasing the album. Because when the album’s released the shit’s gonna hit the fan, but we’ll have won already by having a hit single. Well, once they saw the single taking off they rushed the album out. And when kids came home with this record and mom and dad heard ‘motherfucker’, you could hear the outrage reverberate across America.

“Elektra asked us, could they put out a clean version of the album. We said no and they did it anyway. We’d already had a major disruption in our relationship, and then, because our contract said we had control of our advertising, and a local store refused to carry our records and we called them on it in very graphic street language and sent Elektra the bill [Detroit’s Hudson’s department store refused to stock MC5 product so the band ran a full page ad in a local underground paper that read simply ‘Fuck Hudson’s’ and included, without permission, Elektra’s logo]. That was the final straw and Elektra fired us.”

The 5 subsequently signed to Atlantic and made yet more history, but even now, 50 years on, Kick Out The Jams retains its vital intensity.

“I never tire of playing it,” Kramer enthuses. “It’s exciting every time. Even acoustic. Excitement’s built into the song’s DNA. There’s no way to play that song and be boring.”
THE FACTS
RELEASE DATE
1969
HIGHEST CHART POSITION
US No.30
PERSONNEL
Rob Tyner
Vocals
Wayne Kramer
Fender Guitar
Fred ‘Sonic’ Smith
Mosrite guitar
Michael Davis
Fender bass
Dennis Thompson
Drums
WRITTEN BY
MC5
PRODUCED BY
Jac Holzman and Bruce Botnick
LABEL
Elektra

Kicking out the jams: (l-r) Michael Davis, Dennis ‘Machinegun’ Thompson, Wayne Kramer, Fred ‘Sonic’ Smith, Rob Tyner (front).
Deep Purple’s current guitarist on Blackmore’s blessing, dealing with the haters and why guitar is the best therapy.

Words: Henry Yates

Steve Morse

They call him the hardest-working guitarist in rock, and he has the résumé to back up the title. Raised in Georgia, guitarist Steve Morse made his first blip on the music radar with genre-mangling fusioners Dixie Dregs back in the 70s, and after that he bolstered the re-formed Kansas in the 80s. Then in 1994 he became the guitarist in Deep Purple, with whom he has so far played on six studio albums, from 1996’s Purpendicular to 2017’s Infinite, and seven live albums. While doing all that he has still managed to pop out to play with artists ranging from Luciano Pavarotti to Flying Colors.

To me,” the 64-year-old says, “the guy in the mirror looks like he’s been around the block.”

Let’s go back to the late sixties. Who were the guitarists on your bedroom wall?

Well, a lot of them were British. The Beatles, John and George, The Kinks, Rolling Stones, Yardbirds — there is no bad solo there. I remember when The Who came to town, and I sat right in front of Pete Townshend at this little teen club, and just loved the control he had over the guitar. It blossomed, of course, into Led Zeppelin, Page, Hendrix, Jeff Beck, Clapton with Cream. I got to see Led Zeppelin at a pop festival around the time of Woodstock, doing the thing with the violin bow and the Echoplex. I remember dehydration and the sun beating down, but the music was so awesome.

Were you the classic guitar-obsessed teenager?

I’d practise several hours a day. It was just as much fun as doing a wheelie on my bicycle. I wasn’t smart enough to realise that you needed to sleep. I’d wake up super-early to practise before school; I did my homework on the bus. I finally got kicked out of school because I was constantly trying different things with my hair. I have fairly thin hair, and it seemed like every British rock star had the thickest hair known to man. I came from a different stock, I guess. They were always kicking me out: “You better cut your hair before you come back to this school!” Finally, when I reached the age of sixteen, they did it one time too many: “Alright, I won’t come back.”

Playing guitar is supposed to make you popular with girls. Was that your experience?

No, girls liked the sports guys more. But the motivator was never trying to be something for women. And then playing in a fusion-type instrumental band like Dixie Dregs, you get a lot of women that wear black T-shirts and look like guys. I’m joking — of course, women hated it. But it was like making a model rocket as a kid, y’know — this controlled explosion. It was demanding for a young guitar player. But for me the challenge was part of the deal. I see these advertisements on TV now for BattleBots, and Dixie Dregs was something like that. You could get into it as deep as you wanted to, intellectually. But also there was something primal about it.

Do you think your guitar solos reflect your personality?

Yeah. Which sometimes led to the guys in the Dregs saying: “Wow, I really liked your playing last night, you seemed really pissed off.”

Because I’d attack the guitar more if something was not going well. The fact that you can attack a guitar was a big appeal for me, y’know, getting intensely into the guitar as a teenager.

Has playing guitar prevented you from having to pay for a shrink, then?

Well, touring gets you ready for a shrink, your bandmates act as the shrink.

How did it feel to step into Ritchie Blackmore’s shoes when you joined Deep Purple?

By the time I got there the ice was sorta broken, because Ritchie had left the band and Joe Satriani had done such a great job covering that. Also, I had been part of the reunited Kansas, when people mistakenly thought I was trying to replace Kerry Livgren – which I wasn’t — so I was used to the mixed emotions of the audience. Y’know, they’re glad to see the band again… but they wish it was the original guys. Every once in a while, people will be throwing stuff at you — I mean literally throwing stuff at you. For some reason those people stand out more in your memory. I’ve never met Ritchie, but in the press, his posture was: ‘Good luck’. It is a signal to the trolls if somebody says: “They suck with this new guy.” He didn’t do that. I think he made it possible for the band’s success. It’s been a pretty easy ride, but of course there’s a certain percentage of people that just hate me because of who I am.

You’re just about to play with Deep Purple in Montreux, the town where there was the fire that inspired Smoke On The Water. How does it feel to play that riff on stage?

It’s like if somebody handed you a remote control that you didn’t design or build. But still, a remote control that says: ‘Push This’, and then when you did the entire place would cheer and billions of cell phones would come out. It’s kinda fun. But I’m acutely aware of the fact that I didn’t write it. So don’t worry, anybody, if any of those people are reading right now.

What’s the most you’ve ever spent on a guitar?

Maybe a thousand bucks. I can get guitars free now, but when I get one I can’t really sell it. I can’t ever get rid of it. So it’s sorta like taking in a pet — you gotta be responsible for it. It needs to be in an air-conditioned space. And you really need to play it, otherwise you’re just hoarding.

Last time we spoke you said your right hand was breaking down. How is it now?

Well, it’s still talkin’ to me. It’s arthritis in the joint. So the less I move, the better it is. When I practise it’s no fun. Then at the gig I take everything that’s legal, and apply everything that’s legal to the joint. That and adrenalin gets you through. Then it hurts the rest of the night. At the gig it doesn’t play on my mind, but it’s always there.

Q&A

Deep Purple’s current guitarist on Blackmore’s blessing, dealing with the haters and why guitar is the best therapy.

Remastered special editions of Deep Purple In Rock and Fireball are out now, on purple vinyl, via Rhino.
A certain percentage of people just hate me because of who I am.
Ask Greta Van Fleet guitarist Jake Kiszka for one specific memory he’d take away from 2018, and he doesn’t spend long thinking about it. It happened back in July, when the young Michigan band were playing at the Quebec City Summer Festival as main support for the Foo Fighters. The huge crowd had put up with light rain throughout the day, but during Greta Van Fleet’s set the heavens suddenly opened and it began to pour down. That’s when Kiszka stepped forward to take an old-school solo.

“I just went down on the deck in the rain and started playing,” says the 22-year-old Kiszka, whose flamboyant, axe-behind-the-head style evokes the great showmen of the past. “There were literally, like, a hundred thousand people there and it just went crazy. It really felt like it struck a deep chord with these people. It was a really visceral reaction.”

That might not seem remarkable, until you consider two things. Firstly, Greta Van Fleet were still three months away from releasing their debut album. That a band who should have still been taking baby steps at that point in their career could draw in so many people indicates just how fast and vertiginous their rise has been. Secondly, and more importantly, that kind of thing isn’t supposed to happen any more. The gatekeepers of cool have deemed that rock’n’roll is a spent force, a once noble beast expending its final pained gasps well away from the concerns of popular culture. And given the scarcity of traditional rock bands who have made any imprint outside the boundaries of their insular scene in recent years, you can see their point.

But Greta Van Fleet are disproving that theory. Whether by accident or design, they’ve tapped into a current of musical populism that has been buried deep for a long time. Few will argue with the notion that they are a band out of time, but right now it feels like they’re ahead of the curve rather than behind it.

“It was only a couple of days ago that I had a realisation that this is significant, what we’re doing here,” says Josh Kiszka, Great Van Fleet’s singer and Jake’s twin brother. “Maybe we’re introducing a new generation of rock’n’roll.”

Words: Dave Everley Photos: Doug Coombe

From out of nowhere and suddenly the most talked-about new guitar band around, Greta Van Fleet might take inspiration from the past, but they’re poised to take the baton from the old guard of rock greats and carry it into the future.
“Introducing a new generation of rock’n’roll” is a hell of a pitch, but Greta Van Fleet can make a legitimate claim to it. In less than 18 months they’ve become the most talked-about new guitar band around. Their 2018 debut album, Anthem Of The Peaceful Army, was an out-of-the-gate success on both sides of the Atlantic, while their live shows generate a communal exhilaration from audiences who have been waiting years for an experience this unifying.

No one expected Greta Van Fleet to become quite this big quite so quickly, least of all Greta Van Fleet themselves. Still, they’re just about acclimatising.

“It happened faster than anyone expected,” says Sam Kiszka, bassist and younger brother of Josh and Jake by three years. “It keeps catching me off guard. But it really goes to show that people are ready for a resurgence in rock music.”

Classic Rock spoke to the three Kiszka brothers and non-sibling drummer Danny Wagner separately by phone over the space of two days. It’s difficult to tell exactly what they’re like without being in a room with them, but first impressions are that Josh is eloquent and decisive, Jake quiet and intense, and Sam garrulous and open, while if Wagner is cowed, he hides it well.

“I always wanted to put together a band,” says Jake, who says he first picked up a guitar, one of his father’s, at the age of three and has been inseparable from the instrument ever since, “but I never figured it would be with my brothers.”

The Kiszkas and Wagner grew up in Frankenmuth, Michigan, a quiet town (population: 4,944) a couple of hours’ drive north of Detroit. The town was founded by German settlers; today it proudly bears the nickname ‘Michigan’s Little Bavaria’ and is home to the world’s largest Christmas store. The brothers’ childhood was the same as many middle-class kids in rural America.

But there were less conventional elements to their upbringing too. Their father, Kelly, has a bachelor’s degree in philosophy, and the Kiszkas were schooled early on in the subject. The house was filled with books, and dinner would be soundtracked with what Josh describes as ‘deep philosophical conversations’ over the gravy boat.

“But there were things he’d warn us to be careful with: ‘You don’t want to get too far into this or that,’” he says. “Nietzsche was one of them. He thought of himself as a philosopher. But there were less conventional elements to his thought.”

Instead the young Josh gravitated towards the likes of Henry David Thoreau and Ralph Waldo Emerson, the so-called Transcendentalists – men who sought solitude and independence in nature.

“That stuff is about individuality, which I think is the pulse of mankind,” says Josh. “When you strip man of classicism and racism. There’s no room for that in rock music.”

When they weren’t in school, they’d be outside, camping in the woods and building rafts on the river; Huckleberry Finn stuff.

“Their live shows generate exhilaration from audiences who have been waiting years for an experience this unifying.”

Josh: “There’s a challenge behind it that’s part of what makes it so enjoyable. It’s not that we ever set out to be famous or rich or whatever the hell – none of that stuff really mattered to us. What we wanted to do was write music that we wanted to hear and put it out in the world. Share ideas and spread the message of love and peace and unity.”

The last time Greta Van Fleet were in London, in November 2018, they dropped by the Black Heart, a charmingly scuzzy rock boozer in a Camden Town side street. The place holds good memories for the band: in September 2017 they played their first UK show there, in the pub’s 150-capacity upstairs room. “We were still loading our stuff in,” says Danny Wagner. “I think I carried every piece of my kit up those stairs. We had so much adrenaline going. I think we got to meet everyone after that show.”

Fourteen months on, they were playing a much bigger venue, the 2,300-capacity Kentish Town Forum a mile up the road – and not just one night, but three. That’s going from playing to 150 people to close to 9,000 in just over a year.

If you’ve encountered Greta Van Fleet only on the back of their recent success, you’d be forgiven for thinking they’re an overnight sensation. But You Tube says otherwise. A quick search using the keywords ‘Greta Van Fleet Frankenmuth’ throws up a video dated September 17, 2012. It shows the band playing a cover of Ozzy Osbourne’s ‘Crazy Train’ on an outdoor stage at what appears to be a town fair. If that wasn’t Greta Van Fleet’s very first gig, it was close. You’d never guess it was them.

If you didn’t already know: Jake and Sam have short hair, Josh has the sort of chin-length curtain coiffure beloved of teens the world over and a voice that sounds like hippie talk, well, that’s because it is. The singer doesn’t baulk at the description. At one point he calls Greta Van Fleet “a movement – a peaceful reaction to tyranny, to oppression and classicism and racism. There’s no room for that in this world.” Laugh at the earnestness if you want, but it’s difficult to argue with the sentiment.

How do you square that world view with being in a rock’n’roll band in 2019?”

Their 2018 debut album, Anthem Of The Peaceful Army, was an out-of-the-gate success on both sides of the Atlantic, while their live shows generate a communal exhilaration from audiences who have been waiting years for an experience this unifying.
for a bunch of musicians barely halfway through their teens.
This would be Greta Van Fleet’s life for the next few years. They'd grab gigs wherever they could, playing places with names like Jan’s Bar And Grill or Cork Fine Eatery or White’s Bar in Saginaw, Michigan. They would finish school on a Friday, spend the weekend playing five-hour stints, then go back to class on Monday, ears still ringing.

At first their set-lists were made up of covers they’d learned from their dad’s record collection – Cream, Zeppelin, Bad Company, old blues numbers – but they were gradually replaced by the band’s own material. Jake pinpoints one song, Highway Tune, as the very first thing the Kiszkas wrote together, when he and Josh were 17. “That was really the beginning of Greta Van Fleet to me,” he says now. Highway Tune is currently the most popular Greta Van Fleet song on Spotify, with 36 million plays. Talk about hitting it out of the park first time.

What was the music scene like in Frankenmuth when you formed the band?

Sam: “There was no music scene. The only live music was, like, polka bands. We didn’t really have anything to work with in that respect. We just had each other. And we looked up to the music we listened to and we wanted to make.”

Which was the most memorable gig you played in the early days?

Jake: “We used to play for a few biker gangs in Michigan – backwoods camps that they would have set up. We'd drive two or three hours north, set up a small stage or a trailer, then hook into a generator and play for three hours. A lot of stuff that you see at that age wasn’t normal – they’d be firing off guns in the air and taking all kinds of drugs and were belligerent.

Sounds scary.

Jake: “It was kind of scary. But once you got up and started playing there seemed to be some kind of respect for the band. I think if we’d have been terrible they’d have rioted. We definitely gained respect for that level of musicianship.”

It sounds like you existed in isolation. Did that spur you on?

Josh: “When you’re on your own you’ve got to create your own kingdom and play in it. And that was the ground work for what this became.”

Jason Flom is the founder and CEO of Greta Van Fleet’s label, Lava Records, and a genuine music industry power player. During his 40-year career he’s helped break artists ranging from Skid Row and Stone Temple Pilots to Katy Perry and Paramore. Flom knows the exact moment that he first heard Greta Van Fleet: 4.43pm, November 11, 2016. He knows this because on his phone he still has the time-stamped email sent by a colleague. The subject matter said ‘GVF’, and the email contained a link to Highway Tune and a message urging him to check it out.

“I remember, I was sitting with my son, and I put it on and was like, ‘What in the hell is this?’” he says. “This is insane. I haven’t heard that sound since back in the day. It was an instant reaction.”

Flom called Greta Van Fleet direct to tell them he wanted to sign them – unseen. The band were astounded; their manager had only sent out the song four days before. This kind of thing rarely happens in the music industry. It certainly never happens when the band in question is made up of a bunch of scrappy kids in vintage clothes playing undiluted rock’n’roll this far into the 20th century.

“A number of things grabbed me,” says Flom. “First, his voice. It’s not from a different era, but from a different planet. And something about the way they create music together, which I realise is because they’ve been playing together since they were little. And then there’s the fact that they were so young. These guys are kids – they were still in high school. It was almost incongruous.”

Flom’s instincts were on the money. A few influential blogs began writing about the band, then Highway Tune was picked up by American DJ Howard Stern. “Then the record just exploded on the charts,” says Flom.

He puts the band’s booming success down to old-fashioned word of mouth. “Rock fans don’t generally stream. They’re buying a lot of albums, CDs. Everybody’s telling everyone else about it. It sounds like a cliché, but it’s been so organic.”

Whatever the reason, it worked. When it was released in October 2018, Anthem Of The Peaceful Army entered the US Billboard chart at No.3 and the UK album chart at No.12. The band’s detractors – more on them in a second – will say that their success was a shoe-in, that the formula goes: ‘young kids + familiar sound + major-label muscle = $$$$. And maybe that’s possible. But if it was that easy, why isn’t everybody doing it?’

Do you ever think: “Out of all the bands out there, at a time like this, why us?”

Jake: “No. I haven’t asked. But I would say it’s because we’re a bunch of kids who play rock’n’roll, who were inspired to be the greatest musicians they can be. Maybe that was enough.”

How do you think you’ve become so successful?

Danny: “It’s intensive word of mouth. Which is a rare thing nowadays. It’s people interacting with each other. And we get to interact with them.”

‘There’s no escaping the similarities to Zeppelin in general and, in Josh Kiszka’s case, Robert Plant specifically.’

The early days and the early gigs and the early experiences of being a band are about creating your own kingdom and playing in it. And that was the ground work for what this became.”
“What in the hell is this? This is insane, I haven’t heard that sound since back in the day.”

Lava Records CEO Jason Flom when he first heard GVF

Does it feel like you’re successful because you’re so against the grain, at least compared to everything else in the charts these days?

Jake: “Yeah, I think it does. There’s something really inspiring about the fact that it’s not necessarily like anything else. Maybe people are shying away from it because of what people might say – almost an element of fear, because of the context. But this is the music we grew up with, it’s ingrained in us. We’d have to go out of our way to sound differently to the way we do now.”

During their 18 months in the spotlight, Greta Van Fleet have amassed a sizable following. Slash is among the musicians who have sung their praises, albeit with a caveat: “I wish they didn’t sound so much like Led Zeppelin,” he said, “but still, the idea of fuckin’ four kids getting on stage and just playing their fuckin’ asses off… I think that’s inspiring.”

Elon John was unequivocal in his praise. The Rocket Man turned up at one of the band’s shows at London’s 1,000-capacity Islington Academy in April 2018, and invited them to play at his annual Oscars party a few months later (he advised them to “flaunt it” more). And then there are the several hundred thousand people who have bought Anthem Of The Peaceful Army. And the 36 million who have streamed Highway Tune… (Not to mention the other 150 million plus who have streamed the band on YouTube and Spotify.)

Inevitably, there’s a smaller but more vocal group of haters, who have crucified the band for everything from lack of originality to gauche ness to being complicit corporate playthings. “They are a new kind of vampiric band who’s there to catch the runoff of original classic rock using streaming services’ data-driven business model,” read influential music website Pitchfork’s scathing review of Anthem Of The Peaceful Army.

In truth, Greta Van Fleet leave themselves open to that kind of attack from all sides. They aren’t original; there’s no escaping the similarities to Led Zeppelin in general and, in Josh Kiszka’s case, Robert Plant specifically (something Plant himself has acknowledged wryly). They are guilty of gauche ness – claiming that, no, Zeppelin aren’t a huge influence. And expecting people to believe that definitely qualifies as naive. Complicit corporate playthings? Might be true, might not. How many people who aren’t underground rock fundamentalists or music journalists really give a shit anyway?

Still, the band themselves are impressively sanguine about all the negativity. “It’s unfortunate that they go out of their way to put that kind of energy out,” Josh says with a shrug, “but that’s their prerogative.”

How does it feel when you’re criticised like that?

Josh: “It’s strangely reassuring. As much as some people admire what you’re doing, there’ll always been a counterpoint to that, there’ll always be someone who hates what you do. And I think that’s a beautiful thing. It’s not really art if you’re not pissing anyone off.”

Come on, you’re just saying that. It must hurt. Or at least piss you off.

Jake: “No. I don’t think it’s pissed any of us off. We’ve never had a conversation where we’re irritated by what someone’s written or said or how someone feels.”

One thing your detractors say is that you’re not bringing anything new to the table. Are you?

Jake: “I think so, yes. It would be a puzzling thing to identify ourselves as a throwback band, because we’re a product of our generation. The music that was written during the cultural revolution – the building blocks of the genre itself – we’re maybe broadcasters of that. But we’re broadcasting it for our generation. We’re picking up where those bands left off and moving forward with it.”

If there’s a secret to Greta Van Fleet’s success, then that’s right there. Granted, the fact that they’re trading in familiar musical currencies helps, and, naturally, the backing of a huge label doesn’t hurt. But they’re offering something that’s both pure in intent and exhilarating in delivery. Because let’s face it, if it wasn’t, then Greta Van Fleet would still be stuck in White’s Bar, Saginaw, Michigan, and we wouldn’t be having this conversation now.

“There hasn’t been a real breakout rock band – rock with a capital ‘R’ – in quite some time,” says Jason Flom. “The ones who have made a dent have been hybrids of different sounds. With Greta Van Fleet it’s just a bunch of guys with guitars and bass and drums; no synthesisers, no DJs. It’s pure.”

Greta Van Fleet are being called the saviours of rock.

Josh: Well, that’s what they’re saying. Is that a heavy burden to shoulder?

Josh: “Yes it is. But somebody’s got to do it. If we’ve been given an opportunity, I don’t see why we wouldn’t take it. We’re just as sick of manufactured bullshit as everybody. We want to hear real music. Maybe we can inspire enough people to pick up real instruments and make real music from a real place.”

And are you rising to that challenge?

Josh: [Emphatically] “Yes.”

By the time you read this, Greta Van Fleet will be thinking about what comes next. Not just the next single or the next round of arena dates that are being booked for 2019, or the festival headlining slot that is inevitable only a couple of years from now, but how they can change and adapt and grow without sacrificing what they’ve built so far. Jake talks about immersing himself in movie soundtracks; his twin brother has been listening to music from around the world. “I like to think that we’re wielding a different torch, offering something different to what others have to offer at this time,” says Josh. “I feel at this point that we’re the right people to be doing it.”

Introducing a new generation of rock’n’roll – it’s a dirty job, but someone’s got to do it.

Anthem Of The Peaceful Army is out now via Virgin EMI/Lava Records. GVF tour the UK in March.
We’re a bunch of kids who play rock’n’roll, who were inspired to be the greatest musicians they can be.”

Jake Kiszka
Every corner of popular culture has its breakout stars. It's an age-old concept: the hot young thing who arrives out of nowhere and becomes the talk of the town, racking up column inches (or the modern equivalent, YouTube views), starting conversations. Hollywood has them, TV has them, pop music, hip-hop and R&B have them.

The one area that hasn't had an honest-to-God breakout star in a long time is rock’n’roll. Not since the late 90s and the days of nu metal, Marilyn Manson and the Foo Fighters has it produced a band or artist that has broken beyond the genre’s boundaries. That isn't to say that it hasn’t had its next-gen success stories – Ghost, Halestorm and countless others have all given lie to the glib notion that rock is dead – but no one has truly stormed the gates of mainstream culture the way they used to.

Or at least they haven’t until now. In the past two years, Greta Van Fleet have gone from being a bunch of goofy Midwestern kids who sound a lot like Led Zeppelin to being proper breakout stars. The Michigan band have crossed over in a way that many people thought would never happen again. They’ve played at Coachella and celeb-studded parties – the sort of places bands who look and sound like GVF do don’t normally get invited to. They recently bagged four Grammy nominations, including one for the prestigious Best New Artist (the last rock band to be nominated was Paramore back in 2008; the last one to win was Evanescence four years before that).

But Greta Van Fleet represent something bigger too: the potential resurgence of rock’n’roll as a cultural force.

This month Rival Sons release Feral Roots, their sixth album and their first for a major label, Atlantic. British nouveau-glam rockers The Struts spent a large chunk of 2018 supporting the Foo Fighters on tour in the US, and their second album, Young & Dangerous, was one of the year’s most talked-about releases.

“I think there was a scepticism on the part of the music industry that this kind of music would ever come back,” says Jason Flom, CEO of Lava Records and the man who discovered and signed Greta Van Fleet. “But now you’ve got a bunch of guys playing pure rock music, who are bringing this sound and this experience to a new generation.”

It’s impossible to pinpoint exactly when rock began its commercial decline. The last genuinely momentous movement was nu metal in the late 90s. But even at its height, that genre was never a guaranteed express elevator to the top.

“Breaking a rock band is a long process, regardless of the climate,” says Benjamin Berkman, manager of The Struts, the British band who are leading the charge alongside Greta Van Fleet. “As the great Bon Scott said, it’s a long way to the top – and that was in 1975.”

But rock’s commercial potency undeniably began to wane in the mid-00s. A thesis could be written on the cultural and generational changes that precipitated this decline, but one major factor that played a part was that young people found other ways to entertain themselves.
“Traditionally the music industry and its investment in new talent is led by the younger generation, and young people are attracted to things other than music,” says Chris Ingham, co-organiser of the classic rock-themed Ramblin’ Man Fair festival. “Even within music, they have more choice now. Grime is just this generation’s punk.”

The emergence of streaming culture has only compounded matters. The likes of Spotify (launched in 2006) and Apple Music (2015) tend to spotlight more popular – and lucrative – genres such as pop, R&B and hip-hop. Rock fans have to take at least part of the blame themselves for that – studies show that they’re less likely to engage with Spotify than fans of other styles of music.

“I believe that the rock fan is more about the album than the pop or hip-hop fan is,” says Benjamin Berkman. “Those audiences seem to be song-driven, and with a few exceptions probably don’t consume entire albums or longer sets of music. To be deemed a ‘credible’ rock band you still need an album or at least an EP. While EPs and albums certainly exist on the streaming sites, it doesn’t seem that most consumers utilise these platforms for that purpose.”

How you view the potential return of rock depends on whether you think it went away in the first place. Every festival essentially stands or falls on the strength of its bill. Ramblin’ Man Fair boss Chris Ingham says a big part of its draw is their commitment to new bands. The likes of Black Stone Cherry, Rival Sons and Tyler Bryant & The Shakedown have all appeared on the main stage at Ramblin’ Man, while the popular Rising Stage offers a unique platform for new and unsigned bands. Acts that have broken through on the latter include Bad Touch and blues-rock hotshot Kris Barras.

“There is a huge amount of talent out there,” says Ingham. “We had more than five hundred bands apply to play on the Rising Stage last year. I would have given the top thirty of them recording contracts. They were all that good.”

He says the Rising Stage’s popularity is indicative of the passion that remains for rock music – and a desire from the people involved to share their discoveries with like-minded music fans.

“My people who come to the festival are lifelong rock fans,” Ingham continues. “It’s often literally a lifestyle. And while they may have...”
their favourite bands from 1980, they didn’t give up listening to or wishing to discover new music in any way."

The presence of a thriving grass-roots community of rock fans with an appetite for new music is underlined by a Facebook group called The New Wave Of Classic Rock. It was founded in 2017 as a platform for people to share videos and recommendations of new bands they’ve heard or seen. “We all felt that there were so many quality new bands around,” says its co-founder and administrator Jeremy Wills. “It really feels like something is happening.”

Wills says one of the reasons the group was set up was as a reaction to rock fans who were disparaging of the current scene. “We were fed up of people saying: ‘There’s no good new bands, music’s rubbish,’” he says. “So we said: ‘How can we think of something to get the older fans to check out the new rock bands?’ And that’s where we came up with the New Wave Of Classic Rock name. We thought it might get them to have a look.”

It’s clearly working – the group currently has 10,000 members. But it’s more than just a means of swapping tips on exciting new bands – it also acts as a support system for the grass-roots rock scene. When Australian band Tequila Mockingbyrd had their equipment stolen during a European tour earlier this year, Wills and his colleagues printed and sold T-shirts to help them out financially. When a Bad Touch gig in Cornwall was left on the verge of cancellation after the promoter pulled out, the group swung into action, advertising the show and adding another band to the bill. After NWOCR marshalled the troops, ticket sales for the gig rocketed.

The rise of Greta Van Fleet has provoked what Wills calls “a Marmite reaction” on the group’s page. “Some people love them, some people don’t. But it feels like they can open the door for a shedload of other younger bands.”

Jeremy Wills

while the success of Ramblin’ Man Fair’s Rising Stage and the New Wave Of Classic Rock Facebook group is proof of a vibrant grass-roots scene, it’s a huge leap from there to putting rock music front and centre on the cultural landscape once again.

With rock fans generally having a mutually antipathetic relation with Spotify and Apple Music, and mainstream radio virtually ignoring the genre – even Greta Van Fleet struggle to get played on pop radio – it has forced bands and managers to come up with more inventive ways of reaching potential audiences. For The Struts, this has included appearing at the Victoria’s Secret’s Fashion Show, and duetting with pop star Kesha on a version of this year’s Body Talks single. As Struts manager Benjamin Berkman, points out, the latter isn’t a new idea – Aerosmith did it more than 30 years ago when they teamed up with Run DMC for Walk This Way.

“I think it’s always been important to push the limits and look for ways to expose yourself to the fan bases of other, perhaps more popular artists,” says Berkman, who points out that Kesha is “a total rock chick at heart” and has collaborated with Alice Cooper and the Eagles Of Death metal. “Given that the listening audience at rock radio is paltry compared to those at the pop formats, you definitely need to selectively find ways to separate yourself from the pack, while of course doing things that remain ‘on brand’.”

That’s not to say the traditional routes to success don’t still work. “Honestly, from where I sit it’s about live shows and it’s about playing for more people in each city than you played for the last time you were in that city,” says Pete Ganbarg, the A&R executive responsible for signing Rival Sons to Atlantic Records for their new album, Feral Roots. “Which is not that different from how it went in the seventies. If you’re getting into the rock business as a label, you have to be more patient. You can get a hot rap record that’s going to stream twenty, thirty million times a week. You can’t expect that from a rock record.”

Does the modern music industry have that kind of patience?
"If you're getting into the rock business as a label, you have to be more patient."

Atlantic Records' Pete Ganbarg

"I know that Atlantic Records does," he says. "Our philosophy is definitely one of patience and artist development. I would rather be the one label with patience, and hopefully be patient enough to be standing side-stage at Madison Square Garden when Rival Sons or Halestorm or whoever it is is actually headlining."

Of course, being on a major label isn't the be all and end all. Neither is it a guarantee of success, as countless bands can vouch. But wider commercial success is indicative of how healthy a scene is—and, let's face it, everyone wants to see their team winning.

There are positive ramifications to what's happening. The music industry habitually follows its own lead. If one band does well, its natural inclination is to invest in more bands like it. By that measure, the success of Greta Van Fleet could have a beneficial effect on the likes of Rival Sons (who, ironically, were doing this long before the GVF's Kiszka brothers picked up their instruments).

The 'Greta Van Fleet effect' is already starting to kick in, according to their label's Jason Flom. He says he has seen a rise in the amount of music the label has received from pure rock 'n' roll bands.

"I have and I love it. Naturally, now more than ever bands want to be on the label that Greta Van Fleet are on. It's logical—they see what's happening, and they recognise that there's a good vibe there."

(By contrast, Atlantic's Pete Ganbarg says he hasn't noticed any uplift. "Not specifically, no. I think that two guitars, bass and drums was here before them and will be here after them.")

The behind-the-scenes factors that combine to make or break a band or artist are many and complex: the right business strategy, a strong team behind you, the support of radio and streaming service, and, crucially, great songs. "And only the very best will make it to the top," says Chris Ingham. "But that still leaves enough others that will be good enough at a level whereby they can make decent-sounding music and perform at decent-sized venues."

Ultimately, what we're seeing now is just the latest cycle that stretches back to the beginnings of the music industry. Genres, notably rock and hip-hop, have had the last rites read to them, only to come back stronger than ever.

"I think all pop culture is cyclical, and right now the zeitgeist is reflecting hip-hop and pop artists as the 'rock stars' of today," says Benjamin Berkman. "At one point no one could imagine a band like Guns N' Roses or Nirvana topping the charts. But they did, and I think it will again should another band emerge with music that is as brilliant and has a frontman or woman of the calibre of Axl Rose or Kurt Cobain."

Even if GVF do prove to be rock's sole new breakout stars, they've at least proved that the genre is far from dead. There's no point waiting for the resurrection of rock'n'roll. It's already happening.

TAKE FIVE

Any of these bands could be the next Greta Van Fleet.

JOYOUS WOLF
They are: Livewires whose dirty rock 'n' roll noise sounds like the bastard offspring of the blues and heavy metal. They've attracted the attention of both Slash and Roadrunner Records (who recently signed them).

For fans of: Greta Van Fleet, The White Stripes

Key track: Sleep Weep Stomp

WHITE REAPER
They are: Kentucky power-pop garage-rock heroes who are unafraid to rock out '77-style. The title of their second album, 2017's The World's Best American Band, might be tongue-in-cheek, but it's also pretty accurate.

For fans of: Cheap Trick, Biters

Key track: Judy French

DOROTHY
They are: ultra-classy LA rockers fronted by powerhouse singer Dorothy Martin. Their two albums, 2015's Rockisdead and 2017's 28 Days In The Valley, were released on rap superstar Jay-Z's Roc Nation label.

For fans of: Halestorm, the Rolling Stones

Key track: Dark Night

SHEER MAG
They are: The unlikely point where DIY punk, 70s rock and vintage R&B all meet. Singer Tina Halladay has charisma to burn, while the band's 2015 debut album, Need To Feel Your Love, adds an underground twist to classic rock'n'roll.

For fans of: Alabama Shakes, AC/DC

Key track: Meet Me In The Street

STATION
They are: “New York City rock'n'roll”, according to them. An utterly glorious nod to the kind of skyscraper-chossed prime 80s hard rock that grunge tried – and clearly failed – to kill.

For fans of: Def Leppard, Skid Row, H.e.a.t

Key track: I Won't Break Your Heart
Rival Sons’ ‘piss or get off the pot’ moment came early in their career. Scott Holiday isn’t sure precisely when, but he can remember where. “The lovely city of Cleveland, Ohio,” the guitarist says without any discernible rancour.

Rival Sons had been booked into a venue that could hold a couple of thousand people, but the combination of a group with zero profile in the US and a support act that bailed at the eleventh hour meant the audience barely reached double figures. The band had already spent months driving around in splitter vans, living below the breadline, convincing themselves that they were doing the right thing. But this was an almighty kick in the nuts.

“We had to face up what was going on,” says Holiday. “We had a long talk with each other. Like, ‘Why the fuck are we doing this? Is this what we really want?’ And we went out and played this show and it was just exceptional. People were rolling on the ground, freaking the fuck out, losing their minds. We were the best we could be. It was, like, [gleefully] ‘Oh, shit!”

As the band pulled away after the show, they knew what their future held. “Something happened that night. It was cathartic. It reaffirmed why we wanted to do this. Everyone believed in the group and in each other and in the mission of playing rock’n’roll.”

However many years down the line, Rival Sons have stayed true to that mission, resolute to the point of fundamentalism in the power and authenticity of their music.

That determination has paid off. The band’s new album, Feral Roots, is simultaneously their most direct, most nuanced and most urgent yet – the kind of record that bands 10 years into their career shouldn’t make.

There’s another reason why it’s significant. After almost a decade in the trenches with British indie label Earache, Feral Roots marks Rival Sons’ major-label debut. The band signed to Atlantic Records last year. This record might officially be on long-time producer Dave Cobb’s Low Country Sound imprint, but it’s the label that launched Led Zeppelin that’s providing the muscle.

It’s an impressive reversal of the downward, major-to-indie arc that most bands this far into their career follow. And that’s not even factoring in Greta Van Fleet, 2018’s biggest success story and a band who are mining a seam of rock’n’roll gold that Holiday and his bandmates uncovered years ago. It’s starting to look like the world is finally catching up with Rival Sons. And Rival Sons know it.

“We’re watching a tidal wave about to unleash,” says singer Jay Buchanan. “People have been predicting this imminent return to form for the last couple of years. These things come in cycles, and it’s absolutely natural that it’s going to happen. I see it happening now. And I absolutely feel part of it.”

Somewhere within the vast expanse of a suburban Orange County, 40 miles from downtown Los Angeles and 10 minutes’ drive from the Pacific Ocean, is the faceless rehearsal studio where Rival Sons are preparing for the most important chapter of their career so far.

Right now, Jay Buchanan is reclining on a low sofa in the studio’s kitchen-come-green room as the stop-start thump of the rest of the band reacquainting themselves with songs they last played in a studio several months ago drifts in from down the corridor. The singer apologises for not letting me sit in while they practice. “This is only our second day here,” he says. “We’re still trying to get these songs under our hands.”

Buchanan carries himself exactly like you want a rock star to carry...
We’re watching a tidal wave about to unleash. And I absolutely feel part of it.

Jay Buchanan
himself. He looks the part: at least 75 per cent leather, fake fur and Native American jewellery (he’s of Creek Indian heritage). He certainly talks the part: intense and charismatic, sometimes elliptical, occasionally blunt.

It’s ironic, given that Buchanan never wanted to be a rock star. He’s talked in the past about finding rock’n’roll “adolescent… predictable”. When he spoke to Classic Rock in 2014, he freely admitted that there were aspects of Rival Sons that were “complete bullshit – I look around and a lot of it is about lifestyle. So little of it is about music.”

Today he seems more comfortable with the idea of being the singer in a rock’n’roll band – and in Rival Sons specifically. “It’s just like any other situation, like a marriage or whatever,” he says. “You have to fertilise it and nourish it. And it ends up taking its own shape. Does it always retain my interest? Not always. It’s like anything else: sometimes you get bored, or you fall out of love. So you have to continually seek out new stimuli.”

In the case of Feral Roots, that new stimuli came right at the start of the process. The singer moved to Nashville almost three years ago, while Holiday remained in California. Rather than exchange ideas long-distance, the pair opted to hole up in a remote shack owned by a friend on a spit of land between two man-made lakes near the small town of Hohenwald in Northern Tennessee.

“It’s pretty threadbare in terms of amenities,” Buchanan says. “But when you induce a severe lack of distractions it allows you to be present. It was the spirit of nutrition we needed.”

The two of them stayed in the shack for a week, “talking, lightning candles and coming up with some far-out ideas.” In a decade of being in a band together, they had never worked this closely.

“We were really trying to graft our individual energies together, as opposed to it being two separate people doing things in tandem,” he explains. “It was really the pairing of the preacher and the gunslinger.”

Asked who’s who, he laughs. “Scott’s obviously the gunslinger,” he says, “I’m the one who’s given to long lectures and monologues.”

This much is true. One of Feral Roots’ stand-out tracks is Look Away, a song that Buchanan describes as “a discourse on the inherent confusion with the body politic and the rapidly changing social norms and the entitlement through the anonymity that comes with social media and everything. I see these as very exciting times, but it’s easy to retreat and become complacent. Making the decision not to look away is important.”

“Theres no Zeppelin without Robert Plant. There’s no Rolling Stones without Mick. Without Jay we don’t have this band.”

Michael Miley
There’s an equally layered meaning behind the album title. Buchanan equates the term ‘feral roots’ to “a return to form” – not getting back on top, he says, but a return to who you are.

“We live in a technologically sophisticated global community, everyone clamouring for your attention. And the further you get into this Logan’s Run world, the more attractive the jungle is going to seem to you. ‘Feral roots’ is really about keeping one hand in the mystic. About keeping a link to the past as you move into the future.”

The grounded outlook has shaped his view of the major-label machine. He’s had his own unfavourable experiences of the music industry mincer as a young solo artist, when a big record company tried (unsuccessfully) to mould him into something he wasn’t. “He says he went into this deal with his eyes open.”

“I was very much: ‘This is who you’re dealing with, this is the way I look at things, don’t expect me to be something I don’t want to be.’” he says. “But then it’s just too clichéd to have an adversarial relationship with them: [surly teenager voice] ‘Yeah, whatever, you’re not my real dad.’ They’re a business, there are financial and commercial expectations. Their bottom line is to make money out of our intellectual property. And I understand that. And I hope that they make as much money as possible, because it means we’re doing something right. But we’re never going to let that damage our credibility, because that credibility has been earned.”

Scott Holiday drives like you expect a rock’n’roll guitarist to drive: fast, loops and with only cursory regard for anyone else in his orbit. We’re sitting in his black sports car, driving the 20 miles to Long Beach for a photo session.

As he drives, jumping from lane to lane, we talk. He points out the street he lives on in Huntington Beach, a couple of blocks from the ocean. Is he ever tempted to move up to Los Angeles.

The week-long wood-shedding session in the wilds of Tennessee wasn’t just a creative escape for Holiday, it was practical necessity too. “I’m a single dad with two kids,” he says. “I don’t get a lot of help because I’m really buried when I’m home. We needed to leave and get our heads totally cleared out. So that’s what we did.”

“We all need to make good records. It’s time to step up.”

Scott Holiday

The process of making Feral Roots took the best part of a year. It wasn’t one long solid chunk, although it’s still the longest Rival Sons have ever spent making an album, by several months, which is a luxury that major-label money brings. “We’re not paying attention to that,” says Holiday, sharply and a touch defensively. “That’s just business. They’re the people who are going to work the record and give us financial support and the rest, but it’s not like they’re dictating what we’re doing. We did it like this because we had the chance to take our time.”

Like Buchanan, he’s been burned by a major-label before. In the late 90s he was a member of a band named HumanLab, who recorded an album for incoming irony grenade! Atlantic, only for it be shelved before it could get released. “Ah, I got over that a long time ago,” he says, as we dart between cars. “I’m not bitter. Things happen. The climate has changed drastically, it’s like we’re in a different world. And we’re different people too. It’s less likely to get fumbled, because of who were are now and the work we’ve all put in.”

Anyway, he says, he’s invested too much in Rival Sons over the years to let someone else screw things up. That show in Cleveland might have been a tipping point for Rival Sons, but it wasn’t a one-off. The band’s early years were spent slogging around North America and Europe with little to show for it.

“I was married, we’d just had two kids, I’d moved in with the in-laws so we were making no money, playing to big empty rooms,” he says. They frequently questioned why they were doing it: “Are we doing this to be famous? Are we doing this to be rich?” And the answer to both was and is, wholeheartedly ‘No.”

“Definitely not to be rich.”

So why are you doing it?

“Because I’m this animal. I play music, it’s what I do. It makes me feel good, it completes me as a human being, it’s why I am. And I can look at the guys I’m partnered up with and go: ‘I know that’s why they’re here too.’

Holiday isn’t oblivious to Greta Van Fleet’s success, and he genuinely doesn’t seem bitter that it’s happened in a tenth of the time his own band have spent slogging around the gig circuit and getting a fraction of the attention.

“Me and Jay met them. They seem like the nicest guys and I’m really happy for them,” he says. “I think it’s gonna be tough, because they’ve got to parade around in their underwear a little bit with everyone watching. But they’re handling it well.”

Does it feel like they’ve stolen your thunder?

“Nah,” he says, taking his eyes off the road for a second. “I don’t think some people have put their best work. People are still finding their feet. People, find your fucking feet right now. It’s time for everyone to step up.”

Dave Cobb: Rival Sons’ long-time producer talks about what he brings to the party.

You’ve worked with Rival Sons since their first album. What did you see in them when you first met them?

They reminded me of the records I loved as a kid – AC/DC, Zeppelin, Black Sabbath. And then when they found Jay, they just stepped up another level. He’s one of the best rock’n’roll singers around.

Were they the finished article already back then?

I think they were becoming a band. When you start a band, you’re the sum of all your influences, and those influences start to meld together. They’ve got a sound now, and every record’s been an evolution towards that.

Jay and Scott are chalk and cheese. Was it hard getting them to fit together at first?

They hit it off immediately. Scott went searching for a singer and found Jay, and Scott was a big fan right away.

What’s your role in it all?

Most of those records are done in between one and three takes. My job is to be the guy who doesn’t let them over-think. To pull out attitude in every single person in the band.

What part did you play in getting them signed to Atlantic? It’s funny, because I have a label on Atlantic (Low Country Sound), but it really happened naturally. An A&R and radio person who fell in love with them said: “Do you know this Rival Sons band?” I’m like: ‘Are you kidding me? I’ve known them from the beginning.’

Did Rival Sons pave the way for Greta Van Fleet?

It’s true. And I think it’s great that a band like that are getting a massive lift. Everything happens in cycles, and right now rock’n’roll has a chance.

CLASSICROCKMAGAZINE.COM 37
Does that include Rival Sons? “Dude,” he says. “We stepped up a long time ago.”

Rival Sons’ biggest fan is two beers and several mouthfuls of deep-fried cauliflower into a conversation about his favourite group. “I always say I have the best seat in the house,” says their drummer Michael Miley, “because I sit behind everybody and I get to see up-close how great this band is.”

We’re sitting in a bar somewhere in Long Beach. The late afternoon stragglers are drifting out, driven out by the loud music that forces Miley to lean into the recording device on the table in front of him to make himself heard.

Holiday, Buchanan and bassist Dave Beste have gone their separate ways after the photo session. Miley is staying in a hotel close by because it’s too far to drive home (he splits his time between Ventura County, north of Los Angeles, and Estonia, where he lives with his Estonian wife). If Buchanan is the preacher and Holiday the gunslinger, then Miley is the sheriff with the tin star and righteous attitude. He’s as good a pitch man for his band as he is a drummer – and he’s a tremendous drummer.

“This was the first time we let Scott and Jay properly exchange ideas all the way through,” he says of Feral Roots. “It’s the peanut butter and jelly sandwich; they’re both brilliant in their own right.”

We’re a stone’s throw from the bar where Miley first saw Jay Buchanan sing back in the 00s, on the recommendation of friends. “It was just Jay and a guitar and a microphone,” he says. “There were, like, five people there watching this guy sing his fucking ass off.” Miley was blown away.

At the end of the set, he walked up to Buchanan and handed him his card. “I said: ‘Dude, if your drummer ever calls in sick I’d love to play with you.’”

Miley did end up playing in one incarnation of the singer’s solo band, and was the one who recommended him when Rival Sons were getting off the ground. He’s watched Buchanan wrestle with the idea of being a ‘rock’n’roll’ singer and all the baggage that comes with it. Is he surprised Buchanan is still in the band?

“Yeah, sometimes, because I think he’s still reticent. When I hear him sing, I hear zero reticence. But when it comes to business stuff and photo-shoots and things like that, he doesn’t want to fully embrace it. He doesn’t want to be a cliché. But he’s never going to be a cliché. When Jay walks on stage he’s a fucking alien. He’s superhuman. As great as Scott is – or as great as any one of us is – you need a frontman who represents the voice of the band. There’s no Zeppelin without Robert Plant. There’s no Rolling Stones without Mick Jagger. Without Jay we don’t have this band.”

Feral Roots feels like as much of a tipping point for Rival Sons as that show in Cleveland where no one showed up. It’s not the sound of a band finding their place in the bigger scheme of things so much as the point where the bigger scheme of things might come around to what’s been happening under its nose for the last few years.

“Right!” Miley exclaims. “The old guard are laying down their swords. Black Sabbath have done their farewell tour, we’ll never see Led Zeppelin again. There’s gonna be a big hole opening up in the market, and we’re in the perfect place to step in. We’ve worked our asses off, we’ve played with a lot of those guys – the Sabbaths, the Deep Purples. It’s almost like they’re endorsing us.”

Miley says he heard that Atlantic wanted to sign an honest-to-God rock band after seeing a string of fringe artists win Best Rock Act-type awards at the Grammys. “They signed us because they wanted to bring rock’n’roll back. And they think that we’re the ones to wave that flag.”

There are still factors that can conspire against them, not least the mainstream’s reluctance to embrace hard rock. If it does, Rival Sons are in prime position to reap the fruit of their long, sometimes lonely labours. And if for some reason it doesn’t? The mission of playing rock’n’roll goes on all the same.

Feral Roots is out on January 25 via Low Country Sound/Atlantic.

“Scott’s obviously the gunslinger. I’m the one who’s given to long lectures and monologues.”

Jay Buchanan
NOT WHAT YOU WANTED FOR CHRISTMAS?

THEN

WHY NOT TREAT YOURSELF TO ONE OF OUR FABULOUS COMMEMORATIVE SETS!

OUR LATEST SET IS OUR

50TH ANNIVERSARY SET

CELEBRATING THE BATH AND KNEBWORTH FESTIVALS 1969 - 79

ONLY 10 LEFT

JUST A FEW OF THE BANDS COVERED BY THIS COMMEMORATIVE SET

LED ZEPPELIN, PINK FLOYD, JEFFERSON AIRPLANE, JOHNNY WINTER, PETE GREEN, FLEETWOOD MAC, CANNED HEAT, STEPPENWOLF, SANTANA, FRANK ZAPPA, ROLLING STONES, GENESIS, LYNYRD SKYNYRD, ALLMAN BROS, VAN MORRISON, HOT TUNA, CPT BEEFHEART, STEVE MILLER, TOM PETTY, 10CC, DOOBIE BROS, BRAND X, ALEX HARVEY BAND, BYRDS, TODD RUNDGREN, TUBES, TASTE ETC.

WITH NEWLY FOUND LIVE MUSIC THIS SET NOW INCLUDES AN UNBELIEVABLE

32 CDs AND 7 DVDs

THE SET ALSO CONTAINS - 60 8”x 6” (20cm x 15cm) PHOTOGRAPHS, A CHOICE OF 2 T-SHIRTS, 6 SIGNED FESTIVAL POSTERS, A 330 PAGE BOOK, VERY RARE ARTISTS’ PASSES, 2 BADGES FROM ORIGINAL ARTWORK, FESTIVAL FLYERS AND PLANS OF THE BACKSTAGE AREA AND ARENA ETC. ETC.

TO SEE WHAT THE SET CONTAINS AND ALL OUR OTHER COMMEMORATIVE SETS SETS

www.rockmusicmemorabilia.com

OR CALL 01954 268088
“We were sick of being treated like a joke. Too metal for punk, too punk for metal. Fk that, we were neither.”

Lemmy
“It was make or break, simple as that,” said Lemmy. We were sitting in his Ladbroke pad—like a cross between Steptoe’s yard and the living room of The Young Ones. It was about 1984. But it could have been any time during the 35 years I knew him. He was drinking from a pint glass of Jack Daniel’s and Coke and smoking two cigarettes at once, one with something funny in it. On the table between us lay a huge mirror he had taken down off the wall, on its surface a small hill of white powder. Not salt. Or sugar. He pawed at it with a large hunting knife.

“We were sick of being treated like a joke, or a sort of freak show,” he continued. “Too metal for punk, too punk for metal. Fuck that, we were neither. It wasn’t until we did Overkill, though, that even we knew what we were, really. That was the album that changed everything for us.”

Out of step with music fashions of the late 70s, Motörhead arrived with barely with an audience or a future. Then they released Overkill and boarded a rocket to the moon.

Words: Mick Wall
record I thought was terrible, it went straight into the chart at number seventy-two."

So far, so blah.

Then, in March 1979, came Overkill, first the pummelling song, then the 130mph album. And over the course of one long, sleepless, bone-rattling, bottle-smashing, speed-snorting night, everything changed. Just like that.

“We had already thrown the towel in at least twice before Overkill saved us,” Eddie Clarke told me not long before he died in 2018. “The first album we did [Motörhead, in 1977] had been thrown together in about three days, based on a handful of originals, a couple Hawkwind leftovers and Train Kept-A-Rollin’ which everybody and his dog had done before. Success for us meant coming away with a few quid from a gig, a gram of speed and a joint while some bird sucked your knob.”

It was only after Doug Smith – the Hawkwind manager they had already sacked once then gone crawling back to – took a last-ditch chance on them and forked out for them to record Louie Louie that things began at last to look up. He then took the tapes to Dave Betteridge, “an old mate” at Bronze Records. “I told Dave: ‘Let’s do a single. It’s our ticket out.’

But better to be sure, Doug Smith made sure Gerry Bron was there, a 10-date autumn ‘78 British tour was extended into a full-blown extravaganza, culminating in November with Motörhead’s first headline show in their own right at Hammersmith Odeon, a venue that would become part of their growing mythology.

Lemmy’s growing presence on the London punk scene, appearing on stage for a one-off show at the Music Machine with The Damned (billed as The Doomed) and being photographed with Sid Vicious, who let it be known that Lemmy “was the one what taught me the bass”.

Motörhead’s signing to a long-term contract with Bronze now seemed like a formality. But just to be sure, Doug Smith made sure Gerry Bron was at the Odeon to gauge the reaction of the audience for himself. “I knew it was going to be full and that the fans would go mad,” says Smith, “the hard part was making sure people like Gerry and Dave and Neil [Warnock, promoter] were all there to see it.”

With momentum now building beneath them, a 10-date autumn ’78 British tour was extended into a full-blown extravaganza, culminating in November with Motörhead’s first headline show in their own right at Hammersmith Odeon, a venue that would become part of their growing mythology.

Motörhead’s signing to a long-term contract with Bronze now seemed like a formality. But just to be sure, Doug Smith made sure Gerry Bron was at the Odeon to gauge the reaction of the audience for himself. “I knew it was going to be full and that the fans would go mad,” says Smith, “the hard part was making sure people like Gerry and Dave and Neil [Warnock, promoter] were all there to see it.”

Drammer Phil “Philthy Animal” Taylor was always credited as an equal co-writer on the albums because, said Clarke, “we knew if we did make it that we didn’t want Lemmy and I coming to work in Rolls-Royces and Phil on a pushbike.”

Yet it was Taylor who came up with the musical motif that turned Motörhead from a street-level
Eddie Clarke, Phil Taylor and Lemmy in front of a Snaggletooth mural on London's Harrow Road, February ’79.

“Success for us meant coming away with a few quid from a gig, a gram of speed and a joint while some bird sucked your knob.”

Eddie Clarke
“In the end we just had to trash the place. Lemmy smashed something in the toilet and they sent us a bill for a hundred quid.”  Eddie Clarke punk-metal band into something far more transcendent, when, to test out a new drum kit, he began pounding out the outrageous double-time rhythm to what became one of the most famous Motörhead songs of all time: Overkill. They were rehearsing in Notting Hill, and Taylor had just taken possession of a new kit fitted, unusually for the times, with two kick drums.

Clarke: “Phil goes: ‘Why can’t we do a song like this?’ and starts going mental, cos he’s got these two bass drums and he doesn’t know what to fucking do with them. Lemmy goes: ‘All right, then,’ starts playing in E, as he usually did, and I jumped in. Ten minutes later we had Overkill. We were all grinning, going: ‘Yeah, that was a bit of all right. Let’s do it again.’ That was the big turning point song-wise. It was fantastic! Blimey, we loved that!”

The lyrics Lemmy came up with for Overkill reflected the speed and sheer exuberance of the track: ‘On your feet you feel the beat, it goes straight to your spine/Shake your head, you must be dead if it don’t make you fly’ The band were so delighted they made it the title track of their first album for Bronze, and insisted it be the first single released from it. It was Taylor’s over-the-top drums on the track, though, that would leave the most lasting impression, not least on the approaching wave of thrash and speed metal bands.

Overkill proved that musically you now underestimated Motörhead at your peril. In fact, Lemmy’s skill on the bass – much like Taylor’s on drums and Clarke’s on guitar – was hugely underrated. Where his bass style in Hawkwind had been based on drones and power chords, it was the latter that now came into play more prominently in Motörhead. This was partly out of convenience. Making a two-string power chord down on tape was almost impossible.”

It was a task made immeasurably simpler on the Overkill album by the sheer quality of the songs. In the likes of Damage Case and Limb From Limb the band had taken rock and metal to a new, shuddering level of power. While on a track like I’ll Be Your Sister they belied their own flying-sparks riffs with the kind of insightful, tender lyric that Leonard Cohen would have been proud of: ‘I like to read books, what can I tell you?’ Lemmy grinned when I asked about these lyrics. “Just because we like very loud music doesn’t mean we don’t enjoy quieter moments.”

With the £30,000 advance from Bronze that Doug Smith had negotiated for them, Motörhead had been able to afford to hire legendary former Rolling Stones producer Jimmy Miller to oversee two months at Roundhouse studios making what would be their breakthrough album.

Overkill proved that musically you now underestimated Motörhead at your peril. In fact, Lemmy’s skill on the bass – much like Taylor’s on drums and Clarke’s on guitar – was hugely underrated. Where his bass style in Hawkwind had been based on drones and power chords, it was the latter that now came into play more prominently in Motörhead. This was partly out of convenience. Making a two-string power chord down on tape was almost impossible.”

It was a task made immeasurably simpler on the Overkill album by the sheer quality of the songs. In the likes of Damage Case and Limb From Limb the band had taken rock and metal to a new, shuddering level of power. While on a track like I’ll Be Your Sister they belied their own flying-sparks riffs with the kind of insightful, tender lyric that Leonard Cohen would have been proud of: ‘I like to read books, what can I tell you?’ Lemmy grinned when I asked about these lyrics. “Just because we like very loud music doesn’t mean we don’t enjoy quieter moments.”

With the £30,000 advance from Bronze that Doug Smith had negotiated for them, Motörhead had been able to afford to hire legendary former Rolling Stones producer Jimmy Miller to oversee two months at Roundhouse studios making what would be their breakthrough album.

Overkill proved that musically you now underestimated Motörhead at your peril. In fact, Lemmy’s skill on the bass – much like Taylor’s on drums and Clarke’s on guitar – was hugely underrated. Where his bass style in Hawkwind had been based on drones and power chords, it was the latter that now came into play more prominently in Motörhead. This was partly out of convenience. Making a two-string power chord down on tape was almost impossible.”

It was a task made immeasurably simpler on the Overkill album by the sheer quality of the songs. In the likes of Damage Case and Limb From Limb the band had taken rock and metal to a new, shuddering level of power. While on a track like I’ll Be Your Sister they belied their own flying-sparks riffs with the kind of insightful, tender lyric that Leonard Cohen would have been proud of: ‘I like to read books, what can I tell you?’ Lemmy grinned when I asked about these lyrics. “Just because we like very loud music doesn’t mean we don’t enjoy quieter moments.”

With the £30,000 advance from Bronze that Doug Smith had negotiated for them, Motörhead had been able to afford to hire legendary former Rolling Stones producer Jimmy Miller to oversee two months at Roundhouse studios making what would be their breakthrough album.
that became a key component in the signature Motorhead sound, as evinced on every one of the 10 tracks on Overkill.

With the single and album released two weeks apart in March 1979, and a 20-date UK headline tour to coincide, Overkill became the first Motorhead album to make the UK Top 30, reaching No.24, while the single gave them their first Top 40 hit, reaching No.39.

There was another Top Of The Pops appearance to go with it, Lemmy’s gap-toothed smile devouring the camera. The band were also rewarded with the front cover of Sounds magazine, and a half-hour live broadcast on Radio 1 in May of a raucous, no-frills concert from London’s Paris Theatre. The day after that they played their first show abroad, in front of a curious and mostly stunned audience in France at the Palais D’Hiver in Lyons. A second single from the album was released. No Class was a three amigos ‘original’ that was essentially a rewrite of ZZ Top’s Tush, itself essentially a rewrite of every 12-bar blues boogie ever invented. But it was not a significant hit.

Lemmy didn’t care, though. He was too busy reveling in his newfound success. The drugs and drinking, though, were a given come rain or shine. What increased now, he said, was the sudden uptake in new female admirers. Not that he was choosy. On the road, at the end of another long night of not sleeping, “that’s when everybody becomes good-looking, or at least manageable. But sometimes it’s like there’s the last chicken in the shop, and you don’t seem to be able to help yourself. It’s like having an out-of-body experience. You see yourself chatting up this dragon, and you know you’re doing it, but you still do it.”

T his was another new feature the Overkill era ushered in: Lemmy no longer seen as just a hoary old biker, but a genuine babe-magnet. “I believe in marriage,” he was quoted in the press as saying at the time, big gap-toothed grin in place, “but I can never be faithful. There’s just too many other beautiful birds out there. It doesn’t seem fair not to at least have a shot at getting me.”

What Lemmy was less inclined to talk about was how he had been involved in more than one serious relationship with a woman, only to run a mile when things got too serious. “No, it wasn’t him, being with the same girl forever,” said Clarke, confirming the impression of Lemmy the eternal loner. “When I was in the band he’d already made up his mind. He had his son, we knew about Paul. But he hated [Paul’s mother] Tracey for fucking doing it to him. He was angry about that. Then he had a girl called Jeanette who was giving him an awful lot of trouble.”

In the late-70s, Lemmy had been living with Jeanette in a squat in Battersea. According to Clarke, “they had some terrible fights. I think she just used to wind him up. As women do, you know. And he just got fucked off with it in the end. He nearly fucking strangled her once. And I think he thought that’s enough of this, you know. He got so fucking angry with her, I thought fucking hell! Women have the ability to do this. He said: ‘I ain’t fucking doing that no more.’”

Clarke and Taylor were no different. “To be honest, the three of us. It’s why we were so perfect,” said Clarke. “Apart from him having Paul, none of us had any kids or anything. We never settled down. We were what we were. That’s why we were so right for each other. That’s the joke. We were so right for each other, how it got broken I don’t fucking know. I’ve asked myself the question so many times.”

At the same time as Motorhead were being heralded as one of the coming men of what Sounds had recently dubbed the New Wave Of British Heavy Metal, Lemmy was becoming equally familiar to the real new... wave crowd, who also ate speed for breakfast and detected in Motörhead a no-shit gang of do-badders not totally unlike themselves.

The punk association came about, Lemmy said, because “we did actually hang out and play together. I saw an old advert once from one of the music papers that the fan club had reprinted, and it was for a gig at the Roundhouse in 1979, when Overkill was just released, and the bill is The Damned, Motörhead and The Adverts. The Damned would get bottles thrown at them by our fans, we got bottles thrown at us by their fans, and The Adverts got bottles thrown at them by everybody.

“It was a good bill. But it also showed what we were up for. I always thought we had more in common with The Damned than with Judas Priest. The only reason we were thought of as a heavy metal band was because of our hair. Though I never thought much of The Jam, actually,” he adds as an aside. “I always thought Paul Weller was a boring little shit. As he still is today. Just a more influential boring little shit.”

Lemmy recalled trying to talk to Weller at the Music Machine in Camden one night in 1979, “sitting on one of those pool tables at the back. Two or three minutes into it and I thought: ‘Fucking hell, I can’t talk to this guy for long. He was having ‘such a hard time’ and ‘Ooh, it’s so tough…’ Fucking miserable little creep. I’d much rather talk to [Captain] Sensible.”

In fact Lemmy did more than just talk to the Captain. With The Damned now signed to Chiswick Records, who had put out the first Motörhead album, a plan was hatched with Bronze to release a double A-side Motörhead-Damned single. Studio time was booked, but it all came to nought when Lemmy baulked at the idea of recording a cover of the Sweet hit Ballroom Blitz for their side of the single. (The Damned were to have recorded a Motörhead song for their side.) “So in the end we just had to trash the place,” Clarke shrugged. “Lemmy smashed something in the toilet and they sent us a bill for a hundred quid.”

In August 1979, the same month Motörhead made their first appearance at the Reading Festival, third on the bill below headliners The Tourists and The Police, a mammoth, groundbreaking article on the band appeared in NME. Written by one of the paper’s alumni, and fellow knight of Notting Hill, Chis Salewicz, it was the first really serious in-depth look into what made Lemmy, the now 34-year-old suddenly budding rock star tick. It was a substantial piece, far from the “worst band in the world” taunt made by Nick Kent in the same paper just two years before. As such it signified a cornerstone moment in the Motörhead story. No longer a joke, they were now leading the way for a whole as-yet unborn generation of speed-metal bands to follow.

When Salewicz, who believed in the sacramental value of weed and hash, suggested that speed was, well, “bad for your head, man”, Lemmy, naturally, begged to differ. “It doesn’t kill your soul, though, does it?” he said. “Hopefully not, anyway, but it doesn’t half kill your body.”

Salewicz also tackled Lemmy about the Hells Angels, which he accurately described as “part of Lemmy’s Hawkwind inheritance.” Lemmy was proud of the connection. “It’s a very rigidly organised set-up,” he said. “Sure, it can be very negative in some ways, but it can be very positive in others. They’re good lads, you know. As an alternative to disco-dancing, you must admit it has its merits.”

Salewicz also mentioned the time he had visited a squat Lemmy was living in. During the course of the evening he was shown Lemmy’s room (he was out at the time). In one corner was a pile of weighty tomes on the Third Reich. “I remember smiling, though, when I glanced at the open book next to Lemmy’s bed,” Salewicz recalled. “What Lemmy was really reading was a novel by PG Wodehouse. That, I recall thinking, says it all.”

There, in 1979, was Lemmy and Motörhead’s future in capsule form: hard and fast and utterly uncompromising like Overkill, while at the same time underpinned by a sensibility that was dry and funny and witty and not at all as it was supposed to be.

Or, as Lemmy growled in his Ladbroke Grove abode: “Shut up and pass the ashtray.”
A DARK, MAGICAL JOURNEY...

TOBIA SAMMET'S
AVANTASIA

MOONGLOW

THE NEW ALBUM

11 brand new tracks including guest vocals from Eric Martin, Bob Catley, Geoff Tate, Hansi Kursch, Jorn Lande, Ronnie Atkins, Michael Kiske, Candice Night and Mille Petrozza

LIMITED EDITION DIGIBOOK CD
CD | VINYL | VINYL PIC DISC | DIGITAL
LIMITED EDITION 2CD ARTBOOK

IN STORES FEB 15TH

Pre-order at amazon.co.uk  http://smarturl.it/NBAMZ
Exclusive mail order formats available at nuclearblast.de

RAVEN

„Screaming Murder Death From Above: Live In Aalborg“
35 years after „Live At The Inferno“ the definite successor!
CD / 2LP / digital
OUT JANUARY 18th, 2019
RAVENLUNATICS.COM

JOHN DIVA

„Mama Said Rock Is Dead“
CD / 2LP / digital
OUT FEBRUARY 08th, 2019
JOHNDIVA.COM

ROSY VISTA

„Unbelievable“
The comeback album of Germany's first female hard rock act!
CD / LP / digital
OUT FEBRUARY 08th, 2019
facebook.com/rosyvista

MAGNUM

„Live At The Symphony Hall“
The new live album - recorded on April 19th, 2018 in Birmingham, UK!
Feat. guest singer: Tobias Sammet (Avantasia, Edguy)
2CD / 3LP / digital
OUT JANUARY 18th, 2019
MAGNUMONLINE.CO.UK
how do you solve a problem like Be-Bop Deluxe? That was the issue facing industry types and critics during the 1970s. The band were too savvy for rock’n’roll, too sleek for traditional prog, too complex for punk. They had hit singles they didn’t want, toured America with wholly incompatible acts and created pyrotechnical stage shows devised by the most reluctant of guitarist-tooting frontmen. In short, they were the decade’s biggest enigma.

“We had some problems with the old guard in that things had to be clearly defined back then,” explains the band’s founder, guitarist, vocalist and songwriter, Bill Nelson. “We’d be pulling in all kinds of directions, not just from album to album or song to song, but within one piece of music. It made it very difficult for some people to grasp what we were about. We were a postmodern rock band.”

Across five studio albums, Be-Bop Deluxe blurred the battle lines between glam, art-rock and prog, offering a scintillating fusion that pointed to an unscripted future. Visionary works like Sunburst Finish and Drastic Plastic pre-empted the new wave of post-punk and beyond, Just as crucially, in Nelson they had the embodiment of the modern guitar hero, a riff lord of sophistication, guile and consummate ability.

A former art-school student from Wakefield, Nelson was working as a local government officer when he recorded his first solo album, Northern Dream, in 1971. A year later he and fellow employee Richard Brown started casting around for musicians to start a band. Be-Bop Deluxe quickly became known on the local club scene, although more for their visuals than for the music.

“It was never intended to be anything more than fun,” Nelson says, laughing. “We were working in Working Men’s Clubs and pubs around Yorkshire, so putting on the glam-rock thing was kind of subversive. These hard, butch miners would be quite shocked by us. And we enjoyed that idea of getting people’s noses. Instead of getting changed back into our street clothes at the end of a gig, we’d get in the van in our glam gear, with all the make-up still on, and stop off at a fish and chip shop. The looks we’d get were priceless.”

In the meantime, John Peel had become smitten with Northern Dream and played the whole record on his radio show in one go. EMI got wind of the album, too, and told Nelson they’d like him to re-record it with some choice session players. “At that point, I’d just started Be-Bop Deluxe and we were only about two weeks old as a group,” Nelson says. “I told them: ‘Actually, I’ve got a band now, so it’s not like that any more.’” EMI were initially uncertain about Nelson’s new venture, but a storming gig at London’s Marquee in March 1974 persuaded the label to sign them up.

Be-Bop Deluxe were promptly put on Harvest, the label’s progressive arm, and put in the studio to record their debut, Axe Victim. Largely comprised of songs road-tested for more than a year, the album veered from proggy reveries like Adventures In A Yorkshire Landscape to the hard-nosed title track and winking sci-fi fantasias like Jet Silver And The Dolls Of Venus. The band were packed off on tour for two months, supporting Cockney Rebel. “We went down really well with those audiences,” Nelson remembers. But sales of Axe Victim were modest.

For the follow-up, Nelson unveiled a slimmed-down new line-up, with bassist Charlie Tumahai and drummer Simon Fox. EMI duly teamed up Be-Bop with producer Roy Thomas Baker, who was then shaping the sound of another of EMI’s bands, Queen. But it wasn’t quite the harmonious union they’d hoped for.

“We recorded most of Futurama down at Rockfield Studios in Wales,” Nelson explains. “I was incredibly impressed by Roy Thomas Baker’s engineer, Pat Moran. I learned an awful lot just by watching him and seeing what he could do with the studio. But I wasn’t completely overwhelmed by Roy. He would sit in an armchair by the mixing desk and go…”
Be-Bop’s best-known line-up:
(l-r) Charlie Tumahai, Bill Nelson, Simon Fox, Andy Clark.
Wakey wakey! Roly poly! And he’d organise food fights, which he seemed to believe was fun. He also set fire to the mixing desk by pouring sugar on it, then lighting it with a match. I thought: ‘This is public-schoolboy nonsense.’

“There was one occasion when we were at Sarm Studios in London, doing overdubs,” Nelson continues. “I asked for a bit more level for my vocals with the headphones and, ‘for a joke’, Roy turned it up full blast. I had to throw the headphones off, because my ears were nearly bleeding. I said to him: ‘Look, if you don’t stop this messing about, you’re off!’ I read an interview with him afterwards where he called me a prima donna. But this was our second album, and I really wanted it to be perfect, whereas this guy was just pratting about.”

Despite the less than ideal circumstances, Futurama, released in July ’75, contained several Be-Bop gems. Sister Seagull and Stage Whispers were fluid examples of Nelson’s foraging art, streaked with forceful guitar runs. Brightest of all was Maid In Heaven, a near-perfect single that deserved to be a monster hit. “That’s definitely one of my favourite ever Be-Bop tracks,” Nelson says. “It’s so succinct.”

Be-Bop Deluxe were back in the studio by the end of the year, this time with keyboard player Andy Clark on board. Keen not to repeat the mistake of Futurama, Nelson insisted that he produce the album himself this time. EMI, in turn, forced a compromise, stipulating that he team up with Abbey Road engineer John Leckie, who was ready to make the leap to producer. “John had actually engineered some of Axe Victim,” Nelson recalls. “We had lunch together in St. John’s Wood and decided we could do it between us. It turned out to be a really good working relationship.”

The resulting album, Sunburst Finish, issued in early ’76, was a masterpiece. Nelson had hit an early peak as a songwriter, displaying a renewed level of artistry and confidence, while the band were a perfect compliment to his formidable guitar playing.

As befits the final piece of a guitar-nerd trilogy set up by Axe Victim and Futurama, Sunburst Finish includes a searing tribute to Jimi Hendrix on the eloquent Crying To The Sky. “I’d seen Hendrix on Ready Steady Go! making his first TV appearance in this country [December 16, 1966], where he played a guitar solo with his teeth,” Nelson remembers. “It was a Friday night, and I met my mates afterwards at the local Mecca dance hall. We just sat and talked about it all night, because it was so mind-blowing.”

Sunburst Finish also yielded a Top 30 single, Ships In The Night. With its airy synth and reggae-ish lilt, it was written partly to placate EMI, who’d asked him for anything that might sound like a pop hit. “I kind of wrote it tongue-in-cheek, thinking that this wasn’t great,” Nelson says, with a tinge of regret. “But it was a hit. It has its place, but it’s probably my least favourite Be-Bop Deluxe number. I thought that maybe I hadn’t completely stuck to my principles with that song. At the same time, it did a lot of good for us. It opened up a certain area for the band, and people started to investigate the album as a result.”

Sunburst Finish itself went Top 20 in Britain, bolstered by an extensive tour on which Nelson’s conceptual stage ideas reached full fruition. Life In The Air Age was accompanied by footage of Fritz Lang’s pre-war sci-fi classic Metropolis. There were tracer lights, transparent tubes from which the band would emerge, and vast projections of pulp magazine covers, while Nelson had become a stage guitarist to equal any of his contemporaries. The show climaxd with him striking a pose with guitar aloft, similar to the one by the nude model on the album’s sleeve, before it burst into sacrificial flame.
“We had a guitar made for us—a cheap one, but it looked like my Gibson—and rigged by a special-effects department to put an incendiary device in it,” Nelson explains. “It worked fine in rehearsal, but on the first night, for some reason, it didn’t light when I flicked the switch during the gig. So my guitar tech took a leaf out of Hendrix’s performance at Monterey by pouring lighter fluid all over it and setting it on fire. We did it at the Drury Lane Theatre Royal and got banned.”

Equally memorable, although for a different reason, were the band’s first tours of the US that year. As a measure of EMI’s inability to fathom the band, Be-Bop Deluxe were sent out with Lynyrd Skynyrd, Ted Nugent and Blue Oyster Cult.

“Skynyrd were really good to us,” Nelson recalls, “but the others were difficult. We were basically blanked by Ted Nugent and his people. Nugent was a strange guy. When we were between gigs he would feed into Nelson’s next project, Red Noise. “There was certainly some emphasis on electronica and studio innovation. Many of its embryonic ideas did run into dozens upon dozens of thrills, from expansive prog to primal rock’n’roll and a brief, affectionate tribute to the great Duane Eddy.

“I’ve always felt more comfortable as a studio person than on stage.”

Bill Nelson called the Hagström Patch 2000, which you could use to trigger notes.” His mission complete, Nelson then broke up the band.

These days, the 70-year-old Nelson seems busier than ever, maintaining a solo career that runs into dozens upon dozens of albums. He releases several a year (through his Dreamsville website) to a devoted fan base who’ve mostly been with him since the Be-Bop days. His latest is the triple-disc Auditoria, and he has others ready to go. “I think I’ve got it down to ten unreleased albums at the moment,” he says in his soft Yorkshire brogue, at his homestudio just outside York.

Nelson admits to not being fully conversant with current music trends, although fans assure him that the music he made with Be-Bop Deluxe hasn’t dated much, if at all. A spanking new remastered Deluxe Edition of Sunburst Finish, with bonus tracks and live tracks from the BBC archive, plus videos, has afforded him the opportunity to look back at his 70s career. It’s not something he does readily, preferring instead to push on with his next project, but it’s a legacy that he’s quietly proud of nonetheless.

Treasured by guitarists such as Stuart Adamson, John McGeoch and Steve Jones back in the day—and a key influence on a newer breed of left-field practitioners that includes Earth and Sunn O)))—Nelson remains an atypical axe hero. “To be honest, I’ve always felt more comfortable as a studio person, rather than on stage,” he reflects. “I’ve loved the guitar ever since I was ten years old, when I first started playing it, and it’s such a big part of my life. But it wasn’t just about playing riffs, there was other stuff going on as well. I did want success for Be-Bop, and I hoped it would be more on our terms. It was all about taking you on an adventure.”

AXE VICTIM
Axe Victim, 1974
This dazzling guitar showcase takes glam-rock to a rarified other level, while Nelson’s lyrics suggest he was already uncomfortable with his role as stage idol.

MAID IN HEAVEN
Futureman, 1975
With fully flexed rock chops and its to-die-for melody, this is arguably the band’s greatest moment. Bizarrely, it only scratched the UK Top 40. Go figure.

BLAZING APOSTLES
Sunburst Finish, 1976
Five minutes of labyrinthine thrills, from expansive prog to primal rock’n’roll and a brief, affectionate tribute to the great Duane Eddy.

CRYING TO THE SKY
Sunburst Finish, 1976
A roaring tribute to one of Nelson’s prime influences, Jimi Hendrix, topped off by a truly grandstanding guitar solo.

LOVE IN FLAMES
Drastic Plastic, 1978
Amid an album dominated by electronic textures, Nelson delivers an untamed rocker that’s as fierce as anything in a style that runs into dozens upon dozens of thrills, from expansive prog to primal rock’n’roll and a brief, affectionate tribute to the great Duane Eddy.

“I’ve always felt more comfortable as a studio person than on stage.”

Bill Nelson
The Sound of Delicate

Luke Morley (left) and Danny Bowes (centre): painting Thunder in a new light.
Thunder's twelfth studio album is an album with a difference. Dipping into rock, blues, jazz and soul, Please Remain Seated sees the Londoners reworking and reimagining material from a catalogue built up over the past 30 years. Vocalist Danny Bowes and guitarist Luke Morley explain the reasons behind the change in direction, and preview a nine-date UK tour in February.

Whose was the idea for the concept for Please Remain Seated?

Danny Bowes: It came from the fans who wanted a version of Love Walked In that could be played at a wedding without damaging their granny’s hearing. We resisted that for years, but ended up giving it a try. Luke wrote a whole new arrangement featuring a recorder.

Luke Morley: I’d taken a lot of drugs that day [laughs]. So after deciding to try a few more we picked about thirty songs, the only stipulation being that they had to be very different from the original. It was a bit like jumping off a cliff.

Of those you chose to re-record, did some work out and others not?

Danny: A few of them, yeah. We went round and round with them and finally reached the conclusion: this is shit. So we chucked them away.

Are you going to tell us which?

Danny: Until My Dying Day was among them. We tried and tried but it was too much like the original, just a quiet version, and that was the last thing we wanted.

Were you trying to make a point to anyone who thinks they’ve got Thunder pigeonholed?

Luke: There was a degree of that. Somebody might think: “Ah yes, good old Thunder with their bluesy riffs and singalong choruses.” So yeah, it was good to escape our comfort zone.

When would be the optimum time to listen to this album – is it a Sunday-morning record?

Danny: That’s a good question. My favourite Sunday-morning album is by Frank Sinatra, and ours isn’t a million miles away. It’s very stylish.

Luke: This is as close as we’ll ever get to Frank Sinatra, that’s for sure [both laugh].

The stripped-down treatment of Future Train, Thunder’s most socially aware song, emphasises the message of the lyrics: ‘I see a leader with an agenda to hide…/…fanning the flames of this confusion’.

Luke: I like the fact that you can really hear the words. It’s really topical, isn’t it? It could have been written last week.

“I was good to escape our comfort zone.”

Luke Morley

Girl’s Going Out Of Her Head now has a jazz club, lounge-flavoured feel. You can almost see John Thompson’s Fast Show character turning to the camera and smiling: “Nice.”

Luke: I can assure you that catchphrase was used many, many times in the studio.

The gospel approach suits Just Another Suicide and Miracle Man really well.

Luke: I’m particularly pleased with Miracle Man. When I wrote it I considered it a really interesting song, and I think it works better in this format than as a straight-up hard rock track. It has that whole swampy blues thing going on.

You’re going to perform these songs with their new arrangements on the February UK tour.

Danny: It’s not unplugged and it’s not a typical Thunder show, it’ll be somewhere between the two – Luke is playing electric guitar all over the place.

Luke: But we will be sitting down.

What challenges does that present?

Luke: It’s a good question. Six months ago I started planning for the show’s construction. When there is no upturn in volume it’s a case of maximising what we do have and realising that less can be more. How quiet can you take things to make the big bits bigger? Having an extra piano player and a couple of girl singers gives us a lot more scope.

Dan Reed is doing a one-man support spot.

Luke: Both of us saw Dan Reed Network play the Marquee Club in 1988. They looked great and played even better. We were blown away.

Luke, you recently played some shows with Black Star Riders in South America as a stand-in for Damon Johnson.

Luke: It wasn’t exactly a punishing schedule – six forty-five-minute shows in eight days! I really enjoyed playing guitar with no other responsibility. Scott Gorham and I play golf together a lot, so it was like a paid vacation.

Under similar circumstances, who would dep for you in Thunder?

Danny: Not because I’m the best guitarist in the world, because I’m not, but I don’t think anyone else could take on my role. It’s easy to be a second guitar player [with Black Star Riders], but being a musical director is a whole other job. Danny and I have played together for forty-three fucking years, and so much goes unsaid between us.

What will be happening for Thunder throughout the rest of 2019?

Danny: Some festivals in the summer that I can’t talk about yet, and then we’ll make another album. Luke already has some songs, and some studio time is booked, so we’ll get that out in 2020.

Picture the scene: you visit a fortune teller in 1989, and she tells you that Thunder will get to celebrate their thirtieth anniversary. How might you have responded?

Danny: We’d have laughed our tits off.

Luke: Frankly, I’d have been delighted that I was still alive in 2019.

Danny: You can’t possibly know that a band will last that long, so you don’t really think about it. You make hay while the sun shines, don’t you?

Could Thunder manage forty years together?

Luke: So long as no important appendages drop off, I don’t see why not.

Danny: If everybody’s got the strength and the will to keep on doing this, then I’d like to think it’s possible.

Please Remain Seated is out now via BMG. Thunder’s tour commences in Cardiff on February 1.
It was summer 1970, and LG Wood, managing director of EMI's Record Division, was peering at the cover of Pink Floyd's new album, Atom Heart Mother. It was EMI policy for Wood to sign off on all EMI album sleeves, but here was a cover without a title and the group's name. Instead it was just a cow in a field. Presuming there were words somewhere, Wood turned the sleeve over, only to find more cows. According to one eyewitness, “Ah, Friesians” was all the baffled MD could muster.

Three months later, Atom Heart Mother became Pink Floyd's first No.1 album. EMI's powers that be already knew that strange-sounding hairy rock groups sold lots of records. Now, it seemed, they could do so without including their name or the album title on the cover. Just a cow. In a field.

Pink Floyd would make better albums, but Atom Heart Mother remains the apotheosis of their experimental era – or as guitarist David Gilmour later described it, “our weird shit”.

An album that ended with a cow in a field in Potters Bar, Hertfordshire began more than a year before in Rome. Italian director Michelangelo Antonioni had commissioned Pink Floyd to score his next film, Zabriskie Point. They arrived in Rome to start recording in November '69. Antonioni's 1966 movie Blow-Up had been a clumsy portrayal of Swinging London, and Zabriskie Point was a drama about US student radicals fighting 'the man', blowing stuff up and having lots of sex.

The early Pink Floyd embraced the unexpected and the concept of being, as drummer Nick Mason put it, “more than just a pop group”. They'd stopped releasing singles after December 1968 and had followed their second album, that year's A Saucerful Of Secrets, with a soundtrack for the art house movie More. Floyd's next release, 1969's half-studio/half-live double album Ummagumma, included Roger Waters's musique concrète experiment, Several Species Of Small Furry Animals Gathered Together In A Cave And Grooving With A Pict. The piece was fashioned out of found sounds, with its composer ranting in a Scottish accent.

Revisiting the album now is like entering a parallel universe inhabited by epic orchestral suites and songs created from the sounds of boiling kettles and frying bacon.
Zabriskie Point was the next stage on Floyd’s varied musical journey, but the band quickly discovered that Antonioni was an impossible taskmaster. “We did some great stuff,” insisted Waters. However, the director, worried that their music would overpower his film, criticised everything: “You’d change whatever was wrong and he’d still be unhappy. It was hell.”

Floyd lasted two weeks in Rome and then came home. Zabriskie Point was released in February 1970 and was a resounding flop. The soundtrack included just three Floyd tracks, padded out with songs by the Grateful Dead, among others. However, Floyd’s discarded out-takes contained a musical sequence around which the Atom Heart Mother suite would evolve.

“Dave [Gilmour] came up with the original riff,” Waters told Capital Radio DJ Nicky Horne. “We all listened to it and thought, ‘Oh, that’s quite nice…’ But we all thought the same thing, which was that it sounds like a theme from some awful western.”

It’s believed Pink Floyd performed the first version of their new instrumental on January 17, 1970 at the Lawns Centre in Hull. But they were still undecided on their next recording project.

“We’re going to do the music for an Alan Aldridge TV cartoon series called Rollo,” Waters announced in Melody Maker. “It’s rather Yellow Submarine-ish, about a little boy in space.”

But Waters never mentioned Rollo again. Instead, Pink Floyd entered EMI’s Abbey Road studios in early March to begin recording their new work. EMI had just installed state-of-the-art eight-track recorders that used a specific one-inch tape. The company insisted this tape was not to be spliced and used for edits, which meant Waters and Mason had the unenviable task of recording the backing track for their new composition in one 23.44-minute take. “It demanded the full range of our limited musicianship,” Mason said in his memoir, Inside Out.

Pink Floyd had been playing the piece live for some weeks by now, tweaking the arrangement. “We added, subtracted and multiplied the elements,” said Mason. “But it still seemed to lack an essential something.”

The band eventually decided that the missing ‘something’ was an orchestra and a choir. But first they needed someone to write a score. Enter Ron Geesin, an Ayrshire-born banjo player, pianist, poet and writer. Geesin had started his career in a jazz band in the early 60s. By 1970 he was composing TV soundtracks in his basement flat/studio in Notting Hill.

Mason met Geesin through a mutual friend, the Rolling Stones’ tour manager Sam Jonas Cutler. Geesin wasn’t familiar with Floyd’s music. And when he did hear some, he wasn’t impressed. “I called it ‘astral wanderings’,” he said. Geesin also preferred opera to most rock’n’roll, and he took Mason, Gilmour and keyboard player Rick Wright to hear Wagner’s Parsifal at Covent Garden. “I think it’s significant that they all fell asleep,” he grumbled.

Still, Geesin was the obvious choice to compose the score. He and Waters were already writing music for a scientific documentary called The Body. Between them they crafted a soundtrack from conventional instruments and ‘human noises’.

“There are moments on Atom Heart Mother when you get a taste of what Pink Floyd would soon achieve on Meddle and The Dark Side Of The Moon.”
such as breathing, talking and farting. Atom Heart Mother would offer a similar fusion of ordinary and extraordinary sounds.

Talking in 2006, Geesin said Pink Floyd had only the vaguest idea of what they wanted. “As far as I can remember, Dave talked to me about the theme and Rick came round to my studio and we went through a few phrases for the vocal section. The Floyd then went off to play in America and left me to get on with it.”

Geesin composed his score in the midst of a heatwave, “stripped down to my underpants” in his Notting Hill basement. This half-naked Scotsman would play a vital role in Pink Floyd’s next album.

The early 1970s were a challenging time for classical session musicians – it was as if every long-haired rock group wanted cellos and tubas on their records. First The Beatles, then The Moody Blues, The Nice and Deep Purple. Now Pink Floyd.

Ron Geesin had just recorded a TV commercial with members of the New Philharmonic Orchestra, and they’d treated him with respect. But when Geesin and the Floyd reconvened at Abbey Road in June, the EMI Pops Orchestra regarded Ron as another clueless hippie, and made the session as difficult as possible. It didn’t help that an error in the score meant the first beat of the bar was absent, rendering it almost unplayable.

“For the more experienced director, it would have been considered a normal display of nerves and status-jostling and would have been put in its place,” Geesin said. “But I was a novice. I was not a conductor. You’d ask the EMI players a question and it was all, ‘You tell us… I don’t understand.’

One of the horn players was especially mouthy.”

When Geesin threatened to hit the mouthy horn player, he was told to leave. “They removed me,” he explained.

Geesin’s replacement was conductor John Alldis, a respected choral scholar. The contrary session musicians quickly fell in line, while Alldis’s choir contributed the track’s haunted-sounding, wordless vocals.
Waters’s description of the Atom Heart Mother suite’s opening movement (later titled Father’s Shout) as “plodding” is apt. But three minutes in, the plodding ends and Gilmour’s slide guitar takes over, underpinning Icelandic session man Hafliði Hallgrímsson’s lovely, mournful cello. In moments such as these you get a taste of what Pink Floyd would soon achieve on Meddle and The Dark Side Of The Moon.

On the fourth movement, Funky Dung, the guitar and Hammond organ play lazy tag on what sounds like a precursor to Any Colour You Like. The choir’s gospel-like vocals evoke those later heard on Eclipse. Geesin and Waters’s Give Birth To A Smile, from the soundtrack for The Body and included on The Early Years, also used female backing vocals, alongside the rest of an uncredited Pink Floyd. Meanwhile, the suite’s fifth section, Mind Your Throats Please, merged Nick Mason’s distorted voice shouting “Silence in the studio!” with the sound of Rick Wright’s piano played through a Leslie speaker cabinet, a trick later used on Echoes.

Perhaps inevitably, Geesin was frustrated by the finished article. Under John Alldis’s direction, the brass had become softer, less aggressive. “It wasn’t how I’d envisaged it,” Geesin said, before conceding: “It was a good compromise.”

On June 27, Pink Floyd played the Bath Festival Of Blues And Progressive Music, joined by Alldis’s choir and the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble. They didn’t make it on stage until dawn, and Waters introduced their new suite as The Amazing Pudding. “It was a heavenly sound,” claimed the reviewer in Disc And Music Echo. It was less heavenly for a tuba player who had a pint of beer tipped into his instrument before the show.

A month later, Pink Floyd were back at Abbey Road to record the album’s second side. The creative freedom EMI allowed them seems unthinkable now; in the era of micro-managed, focus-group pop. Even though Floyd were producing themselves for the first time, any snooping EMI executive who turned up was given short shrift.
Tape operator Alan Parsons, who would later help engineer The Dark Side Of The Moon, recalled the time an executive dropped by the studio.

“Floyd had a general aversion to record company people,” Parsons said. “An A&R guy showed up, and Roger and Ron said: ‘We’ll play you a bit of the album.’”

Prior to his arrival, they’d hidden a turntable under the desk and proceeded to play an old 78rpm disc through the studio speakers. The A&R man looked baffled and walked out. “But we were all unable to keep a straight face.”

Nick Mason once said Pink Floyd “never threw any musical ideas away”. Ron Geesin recalls the four songs on the album’s second side developing from “scraps of things they had lying around”. And long-time Floyd watchers know that the second side contains some buried treasure.

“It’s the lyrics that make Roger Waters’s delicate ballad ‘If I were a good man I’d understand the spaces between friends,’ Waters declares. ‘If I were alone I’d cry…’

This was Floyd’s imperious spokesman showing a softer side. “We all have our insecurities,” said Ron Geesin. “I thought ‘If’ was one of the brilliant gems.”

After all, Waters, like the rest of Pink Floyd, hadn’t forgotten Syd Barrett’s forced departure. While they were making Atom Heart Mother, the fragile Barrett was recording his second solo album next door.

Geesin was there the day Barrett appeared in Floyd’s studio. He sat on his hands, stared at his old bandmates for a few minutes and then disappeared. “He spun out again as quickly as he spun in.”

Next up was Rick Wright’s Summer ‘68, a song about a casual encounter with a groupie, featuring the EMI Pops Orchestra’s buoyant brass. It’s a very human song on an often alien-sounding album.

“‘In the summer of ’68 there were groupies everywhere,’ said a wistful Wright. “They’d come and look after you like a personal maid… and leave you with a dose of the clap.”

‘Human’ is also the key to David Gilmour’s charming Fat Old Sun. A very English hymn to the wonders of ‘summer evening birds’ and ‘new mown grass’, it suggests a snapshot of the Arcadian countryside set to music.

“It’s fantastically overlooked,” said Gilmour, who wanted the song included on the 2001 Floyd compilation Echoes. “Tried very hard to push the others… but they weren’t having it.”

The album ended with Alan’s Psychedelic Breakfast, a meandering instrumental augmented by the sound of Floyd roadie Alan Styles cooking bacon, eggs and toast, and rendered in sumptuous quadrophonic sound. “One take went: Egg Frying Take One,” followed by ‘Whoops’ as the egg dropped,” recalled Parsons.

“Alan’s Psychedelic Breakfast is quite interesting,” said Nick Mason, who considered the song his baby. “But in some ways, the sounds effects are the most interesting part.”

“It was the most thrown-together thing we’ve ever done,” remarked a rather dismissive Gilmour. Fans would spend decades pondering what Atom Heart Mother’s filmic prog rock concerto, folky ballads and frying eggs actually meant. But nobody, including Pink Floyd, was entirely sure.

Hipgnosis’s Storm Thorgerson and Aubrey ‘Po’ Powell, who were commissioned to create the cover artwork, didn’t have a clue either. They proposed putting a cow on the cover almost as a joke, but the band loved the idea.

With its striking cover image in place, the group still needed a title for the album, and The Amazing Pudding failed to stick. Inspiration came on July 16, when Pink Floyd recorded a concert session for DJ John Peel (now included on Devi/Ation). Former BBC producer Jeff Griffin was at the Beeb’s Paris Cinema studio that night. “John was reading the Evening Standard and Roger was looking over his shoulder,” Griffin revealed. “Peely said: ‘Come on, what’s the name of this piece? I bet you find something in the paper.’

Syd Barrett’s forced departure. While they were making Atom Heart Mother, the fragile Barrett was recording his second solo album next door.

Geesin was there the day Barrett appeared in Floyd’s studio. He sat on his hands, stared at his old bandmates for a few minutes and then disappeared. “He spun out again as quickly as he spun in.”

Next up was Rick Wright’s Summer ‘68, a song about a casual encounter with a groupie, featuring the EMI Pops Orchestra’s buoyant brass. It’s a very human song on an often alien-sounding album.

“‘In the summer of ’68 there were groupies everywhere,’ said a wistful Wright. “They’d come and look after you like a personal maid… and leave you with a dose of the clap.”

‘Human’ is also the key to David Gilmour’s charming Fat Old Sun. A very English hymn to the wonders of ‘summer evening birds’ and ‘new mown grass’, it suggests a snapshot of the Arcadian countryside set to music.

“It’s fantastically overlooked,” said Gilmour, who wanted the song included on the 2001 Floyd compilation Echoes. “Tried very hard to push the others… but they weren’t having it.”

The album ended with Alan’s Psychedelic Breakfast, a meandering instrumental augmented by the sound of Floyd roadie Alan Styles cooking bacon, eggs and toast, and rendered in sumptuous quadrophonic sound. “One take went: Egg Frying Take One,” followed by ‘Whoops’ as the egg dropped,” recalled Parsons.

“Alan’s Psychedelic Breakfast is quite interesting,” said Nick Mason, who considered the song his baby. “But in some ways, the sounds effects are the most interesting part.”

“It was the most thrown-together thing we’ve ever done,” remarked a rather dismissive Gilmour. Fans would spend decades pondering what Atom Heart Mother’s filmic prog rock concerto, folky ballads and frying eggs actually meant. But nobody, including Pink Floyd, was entirely sure.

Hipgnosis’s Storm Thorgerson and Aubrey ‘Po’ Powell, who were commissioned to create the cover artwork, didn’t have a clue either. They proposed putting a cow on the cover almost as a joke, but the band loved the idea.

With its striking cover image in place, the group still needed a title for the album, and The Amazing Pudding failed to stick. Inspiration came on July 16, when Pink Floyd recorded a concert session for DJ John Peel (now included on Devi/Ation).

Former BBC producer Jeff Griffin was at the Beeb’s Paris Cinema studio that night. “John was reading the Evening Standard and Roger was looking over his shoulder,” Griffin revealed. “Peely said: ‘Come on, what’s the name of this piece? I bet you find something in the paper.’”
Also present was Ron Geesin, who insists it was he who told Waters to look in the newspaper. "I said: 'Your title's in there.'" And it was.

Waters leafed through the pages and stopped at a story headlined 'Atom Heart Mother Named', about a 56-year-old woman, who'd been fitted with a radioactive plutonium pacemaker. "Roger said: 'That's it! Atom Heart Mother!' Which had nothing whatsoever to do with the music," Griffin said, laughing. "We were saying: 'Why?' But the band said: 'Why not?'

Two days later, Pink Floyd headlined over Roy Harper, Kevin Ayers, the Edgar Broughton Band and more at a free concert in London's Hyde Park. They performed Atom Heart Mother, again with the John Allidis Choir and the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble. But Ron Geesin walked out in tears. "The performance of the brass was terrible," he said.

Geesin had co-written Atom Heart Mother, but he had to let it make its own way in the world. Pink Floyd’s manager Steve O’Rourke soon reminded him of the perpetual struggle between art and commerce. Geesin had co-written the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble. But Kubrick asked if he could use the suite in his forthcoming dystopian drama A Clockwork Orange. But Kubrick wanted to edit the piece, and Floyd refused. The LP sleeve made a fleeting appearance in the movie.

"The band members have often been critical of the title track. Waters called it "rubbish"; Gilmour once described it as "absolute crap"."

It also bugged him a little that he was never given a co-credit on the album. "Though that was never discussed with the group," he explained.

The Atom Heart Mother suite became a fixture of Pink Floyd’s live set throughout 1970 and ’71, until deposed by their next side-long epic, Echoes. Roger Waters performed it on his early solo tours, and David Gilmour reprised Fat Old Sun for his 2006 On An Island tour. However, the band members have often been critical of the title track. Waters called it “rubbish”; Gilmour once described it as “absolute crap”.

Still, time’s a great healer. Gilmour joined Geesin to perform the suite at the 2008 Chelsea Festival, with cellist Caroline Dale, a chamber choir, brass players from the Royal College Of Music and an Italian Pink Floyd tribute band, Mun Floyd. Geesin resisted the temptation to tamper too much with the score beforehand. "It’s a formed work," he said. "Don’t poke it about too much or it’ll fall apart."

Whatever misgivings Pink Floyd might have about Atom Heart Mother, the album turned out to be a crucial step along the road to their world-conquering The Dark Side Of The Moon. But it’s more than that. Atom Heart Mother is a celebration of the wilfully experimental Pink Floyd. Before the big hits and the even bigger money, it’s the sound of a contrary art-rock band making an ungodly racket in Abbey Road studios, while their EMI paymasters wondered what the hell they were doing.

Like that Friesian peering balefully from the record’s front cover, the music on Atom Heart Mother challenges and confuses, but somehow draws you in. And nearly five decades on, Pink Floyd’s “weird shit”, as David Gilmour put it, has never sounded better.
Welcome To My Nightmare
Fifty Years of Alice Cooper

Esteemed author Martin Popoff’s,
240 page celebration of 50 years of Alice Cooper. A detailed timeline of Alice’s career, packed full of photos.

GENESIS...
Counting Out Time

A photographic journey of the Genesis family of bands from the early seventies to the present day. Including photos from the solo careers of Peter Gabriel,
Phil Collins, Steve Hackett and Mike & The Mechanics.

Both books come in block foil custom made presentation boxes and include a set of prints, suitable for framing.
PUT A PAUSE IN YOUR DAY

With so many demands from work, home and family, there never seem to be enough hours in the day for you. Why not press pause once in a while, curl up with your favourite magazine and put a little oasis of ‘you’ in your day.

PRESS PAUSE
ENJOY A MAGAZINE MOMENT

To find out more about Press Pause, visit:
pauseyourday.co.uk
Adult Oriented Rock is the smooth sound that came out of the USA and became the soundtrack to millions of lives all over the world—a sound defined by timeless anthems such as Boston’s ‘More Than A Feeling’, Journey’s ‘Don’t Stop Believin’, Survivor’s ‘Eye Of The Tiger’ and Toto’s ‘Africa’, and by monumental power ballads, none bigger than Foreigner’s global smash ‘I Want To Know What Love Is’. In a 15-page special, Classic Rock celebrates the very best of AOR from the golden age of the 70s and 80s.

Here we present The 50 Greatest AOR Albums Of All Time. Included are some of the biggest-selling records in the history of rock, and the stories of the people who made them. We speak to Boston’s maverick genius Tom Scholz, Steve Perry and Jonathan Cain of Journey, Foreigner’s Mick Jones, Ann Wilson of Heart, Survivor’s founding member Jim Peterik, Jack Blades of Night Ranger and three members of the classic line-up of Toto: David Paich, Steve Porcaro and Steve Lukather.

We also dig deep, going beyond the hits and the household names to shine a light on the cult classics and lost heroes from this golden age. In AOR, as in life, there are winners and losers; for every fairy tale, a thousand hard-luck stories. Some of the greatest AOR albums were made by artists who never made it big, among them Diving For Pearls, New England, Balance, Giant, White Sister, Valentine and Le Roux. And two now legendary albums were made by a singer who couldn’t get arrested when he was a rock artist, and failed an audition for Black Sabbath before reinventing himself as a soul star—the one and only Michael Bolton.

Equally, while AOR is a quintessentially American art form, a handful of Brits got in on the act, most notably Mick Jones, who founded Foreigner as an expat in New York City in 1977. One of the great AOR voices is Lancashire-born John Waite. And placed high in this Top 50 are albums by British acts FM, Strangeways (fronted by American singer Terry Brock) and Dare (featuring future Professor Brian Cox on keyboards!).

Likewise, while many of the leading American bands live on—including Journey, Boston and Toto—the rebirth of AOR in the new millennium has come from Europe. At its forefront are Scandinavian groups such as Eclipse and H.e.a.t., and the Italian-based record label Frontiers—named after a classic Journey album.

After the lean years of the late 90s, melodic rock rose again, and new albums of real quality are being made, showing that you can’t keep a good genre down for long. In the words that Steve Perry first sang back in 1981: ‘Don’t stop believin’, hold on to that feeling…’

Words: Paul Elliott, Dave Ling, Jon Hotten & Siân Llewellyn
50 Alexa ALEXA Savage, 1989

Such was the grip that Paul Sabu exerted over this unforgivably overlooked record that it was rumoured the whole thing was an elaborate ruse, and that Sabu had simply retuned his own voice and taken on a female persona. Not so. The vocalist is Alexa Anastasia, and the combination of her throaty singing and Sabu’s chest-beating AOR heroics is irresistible. JH

Must hear: Wanderlust

49 Eric Martin ERIC MARTIN Music For Nations, 1986

Before he achieved fame as the singer with Mr. Big, baby-faced Eric Martin was a cult hero with his own band and as a solo artist. This self-titled album was his best from that period, his soulful voice lighting up quintessentially 80s tunes such as Pictures and a great version of Little Steven’s ‘Lyn’ In A Red Of Fire. PE

Must hear: Pictures

48 The Storm THE STORM Interscope, 1991

Formed in the early 90s by three members of Journey – Gregg Rolie, Ross Valory and Steve Smith – during an almost decade-long hiatus from that band, The Storm were a short-term fix for the group’s fans. Despite The Storm being victims of the same Interscope Records boardroom crevice that all but swallowed up Unruly Child and Crown Of Thorns, the Beau Hill-produced delights of this debut replicate the mothership in Mini-Me form. DL

Must hear: I’ve Got A Lot To Learn About Love

47 Cher CHER Geffen, 1987

Cher’s great voice, allied to the hit-making prowess of Michael Bolton, Desmond Child, Mark Mangold, Jon Bon Jovi and Richie Sambora, and a label on one of the great winning streaks in music biz history, was simply too big to fail. Reinvented as a strutting, barely clothed siren, belting out I Found Someone and We All Sleep Alone, Cher embraced this splendid reawakening as only a true star can. JH

Must hear: Main Man

46 Drive, She Said DRIVE, SHE SAID Music For Nations, 1989

It spoke volumes that CBS UK passed on this swoon-inducing debut from former American Tears, Touch, and Michael Bolton keyboard player Mark Mangold and the über-vocalist Al Fritsch, and its pomp-laden charms being shared instead via the independent label Music For Nations. The soulful approach of Fritsch (who died last October) was perfectly complemented by Mangold’s instrumental vision, and the album’s contents are deliciously understated. DL

Must hear: Hard Way Home

45 Ready Or Not LOU GRAMM Atlantic, 1987

Frustrated by Foreigner’s infighting, their singer Gramm extended the golden run of the band’s 4 and Agent Provocateur with this dazzling first solo record, the impact of which was diluted by his almost immediate return to Journey to make Inside Information. Let’s face it, Ready Or Not is almost indistinguishable from Foreigner, the elements of tasty hard rock in the title song and the hit Midnight Blue and a textbook ballad in If I Don’t Have You fully being present and deliciously correct. JH

Must hear: Midnight Blue

44 Seven The Hard Way PAT BENATAR Chrysalis, 1985

In 1983, American singer Pat Benatar achieved AOR perfection with the million-selling Love Is A Battlefield. Two years later she repeated the trick with another song from hit-maker songwriter Holly Knight, the heroic self-empowerment anthem Invincible. Elsewhere on Seven The Hard Way, Benatar’s most complete AOR album, she rocks hard in Sex Is A Weapon and breaks hearts with The Art Of Letting Go. PE

Must hear: Invincible

43 Rescue You JOE LYNN TURNER Elektra, 1985

After three albums as the singer in Rainbow, peaking with the classic hit single I Surrender, Joe Lynn Turner teamed up with Queen producer Roy Thomas Baker for his solo debut. And with Al Greenwood (ex-Foreigner) co-writing and Must hear: Young Hearts

Night Of The Crime

Six of this album’s 10 songs were co-written by ‘outsider’ Bob Halligan Jr, and it was produced by Eddie Kramer and mixed by Ron Nevison. It’s no surprise, then, that Night Of The Crime is one of the best-sounding records of the 1980s. Vocally, instrumentally and in terms of the songwriting, the album remains a masterpiece of keyboard-drenched melodic hard rock.

Must hear: Shot At My Heart

Asia

Equal parts AOR, prog, pomp and pop, Asia’s self-titled debut topped the US chart for nine weeks, selling 10 million copies worldwide. The band comprised members of ELP, Yes and King Crimson, among others, and the addition of former Buggles keyboard maestro Geoff Downes brought Asia a modern edge. “We took our twelve-minute songs and removed the ten minutes of noodling,” explained their bassist/singer John Wetton.

Must hear: Heat Of The Moment

Aviator

One of those great ‘blink and you missed them’ bands, this US Coast-based quartet got just one bite at the cherry. That they ended up in the bargain bins while inferior rivals triumphed remains quite inexplicable, especially when one considers the super-slick production by the then red-hot Neil Korman who slotted Aviator into his schedule between Everybody’s Crazy by Michael Bolton and Queen Mary’s Rage For Order.

Must hear: Frontline

Midnight Madness

From Night Ranger’s second album came their biggest hit, the power ballad Sister Christian, written and sung by drummer Kelly Keagy. It was a Top-Five smash in the US, and later appeared in a teeth-grinding drug-deal scene in the film Boogie Nights. But these guys never stopped kicking ass, as proved by the heroically daft (You Can Still) Rock In America.

Must hear: Sister Christian

When you watched the film Boogie Nights and it came to that famous scene with a semi-naked drug dealer singing and air-drumming to Sister Christian, did you laugh?

Oh, I thought it was wonderful. I went to see the movie with my wife, Molly, and when that particularly scene came around sweat broke out on our foreheads. Like, whooh, this is pretty close to real! We looked at each other and I said: “Man, I think I’ve been in that guy’s house back in the early eighties!” Staying up all night at the drug dealer’s house… Oh boy, we lived that! Our lives are different now.

The song was originally called Sister Christy. Why did you change it?

Kelly [Keagy] wrote the song about his sister, whose name is Christy, but when he sang it we all thought he was saying Sister Christian. Then one day he wrote down the lyrics, and that’s when we realised. I said: “Dude, you should change it. ‘Sister Christian’ is much cooler.” He said: “You really think so? My sister’s gonna kill me!” But I told him: “You gotta do it. It’s poetic licence!” And that was that.

And the song’s hook line, ‘You’re motorin’, also came from Christy.

She grew up in a small town in Oregon, and every weekend they used to go cruising at night up and down the main street. They called it ‘motoring’.

How did it feel when Sister Christian hit the Top Five in America?

It was incredible. When we started touring with the Midnight Madness record we were playing three thousand-seat theatres. But when Sister Christian hit we were selling out arenas, it was ten thousand people a night. We really felt that we had arrived at that point. It was a defining moment for us.

The video for Sister Christian featured nuns in an overly literal interpretation of the song’s title. Did that confuse people?

We were playing in Rochester, Minnesota, and this lady said to us: “Hey, that song Sister Christian, is it about a nun that sells dope to school kids?” What do you say to that? I just said: “Yes, ma’am, it is!” Hey, never destroy the dream.

The cover of Midnight Madness was also a bit weird – why was the band’s keyboard player, Alan ‘Fitz’ Gerald, dressed as a doctor?

The set was a back lot at Universal Studios in Hollywood. We went to the wardrobe department and it was like: “You wear this, you wear that!” So Fitz put the scrubs on. In America now, all these big TV shows are ER and Grey’s Anatomy, so maybe Fitz was just way ahead of the curve.

You wrote (You Can Still) Rock In America, the big anthem on the Midnight Madness album. Was that title tongue-in-check?

Quite the opposite! I wrote it from the heart. All these magazines were saying that rock is dead, but everywhere we played, people just wanted to rock. I didn’t know what these magazines were talking about, so I said it out loud: you can still rock in America!

You were right. But it was a ballad that became Night Ranger’s biggest and most remembered song.

Well, in that era everybody came out with a power ballad. And luckily for us we had Sister Christian. It was never a Number-One record, but it’s a song that defines that whole era.
38 Don’t Come Easy
TYKETTO
Geffen, 1990
Tyketto were a band out of time, signing with the major label that had broken Whitesnake and Guns N’ Roses just as another Geffen act, Nirvana, were washing the last of hair-metal down the plughole. Don’t Come Easy should be taken as a pair with the powerful follow-up Strength In Numbers as a ‘what might have been’ for the wonderfully talented frontman Danny Vaughn. Burning Down Inside and Forever Young remain a genre staples, too. JH
Must hear: Burning Down Inside

37 Valentine
VALENTINE
WMB, 1990
Led by Hugo, a man who took the Steve Perry impersonation beyond mere vocal stylings and into the vaguely creepy approximations of the doppelganger, Valentine achieved a strange kind of AOR immortality with one song from this debut, the ballad “Never Said It Was Gonna Be Easy”. Into its seven minutes they packed every cliche, re-spun into a song of emotionally devastating heartbreak from which Hugo may never recover. JH
Must hear: Never Said It Was Gonna Be Easy

36 Bad English
BAD ENGLISH
Epic, 1989
In the late 1980s, excitement greeted news of a liaison between two key songwriters from Journey (Neal Schon and Jonathan Cain) and a pair of former members on The Babys (frontman-turned-solo hitmaker John Waite and future Styx member Ricky Phillips). And just for once, peerless performance would outstrip the promise of the personnel. No less than five singles were pulled from this debut as it rattled towards a million US sales. DL
Must hear: When I See You Smile

35 Heart
HEART
Capitol, 1985
This is the 40 minutes that reinvented 70s folk rockers Heart as a slick MTV AOR band. For Heart the band jetisoned the acoustic guitars and mandolins in favour of dreamy keyboards, a massive production by Ron Nevison and an occasional searing guitar solo, but all the gloss and bolt-on songwriters couldn’t change the dynamic power of Ann Wilson’s voice. Heart shifted more than five million copies and yielded four Top 10 hits in the US alone (including their first No.1 with These Dreams, featuring sister Nancy on lead vocals). SL
Must hear: These Dreams

34 So Fired Up
LEROUX
RCA, 1983
Still active in their home base of Louisiana, LeRoux were joined by future Toto singer Dennis Frederiksen for this, their fifth album. Equally at home with the ballads “Wait One Minute” and “Let Me In” or more up-tempo moments such as “Carrie’s Gone”, “Turning Point” and “LifeLine” (later recorded by Uriah Heep), the performance from Frederiksen (who passed away in 2014) is superlative. DL
Must hear: Turning Point

33 In For The Count
BALANCE
Portrait, 1982
Prior to reuniting for the all-new Equilibrium in 2009, these New Yorkers crafted two excellent releases in the 80s. In For The Count being their second. Led by singer Peppy Castro, guitarist Bob Kulick and keyboard player Doug Katsaros, their sound was crisp, nimble and very stylish. It’s now possible to pick up the first pair of albums as a single CD, and they’re highly recommended. DL
Must hear: In For The Count

32 Unruly Child
UNRULY CHILD
Intersect, 1992
Unruly Child teamed the ex-World Trade duo of keyboard player Guy Allison and guitarist Bruce Gowdy with a genuinely world class singer in ex-Signal/King Cobra man Mark Free. The results were an immaculate, chest-beating mix of AOR, hard rock and melodic metal, although a combination of grunge, record label bumbling and Free’s gender confusion stopped the band in its tracks. DL
Must hear: Who Cries Now

31 Freedom At Point Zero
JEFFERSON STARSHIP
Grant/RCA, 1979
You will almost certainly know this album’s single, Jane, an all-time classic riffer. Freedom At Point Zero, its parent album, saw the introduction of an uncut diamond named Mickey Thomas on vocals, with Grace Slick and Marty Balin having headed out of the door. Slick would return two years, later but in the meantime guitarist Craig Chaquico tilted the rudder firmly towards arena-friendly acceptance with the track “Too Hot To Sleep”.
Must hear: Jane

30 When Seconds Count
SURVIVOR
Scotti Brothers, 1986
This great album could have been even greater had Burning Heart, Survivor’s second Rocky theme hit, not been tied exclusively to the film’s soundtrack. Even so, When Seconds Count is a monumental achievement – Is This Love is a perfect pop rock song. Rebel Son the most epic track of the band’s career. 1988 follow-up Too Hot To Sleep is also a doozy. PE
Must hear: Rebel Son

29 Get Lucky
LOVERBOY
Columbia, 1981
The sleeve showing a set of crossed fingers behind a backside wearing sprayed-on red leather strides summed up the boisterous optimism of Get Lucky, the second album from fun-loving Canadians Loverboy. Doug Johnson’s urgent keyboards add depth and colour to the slyly hooky songs. No wonder it sold four million copies in the US alone, remaining on the US chart for more than two years. PE
Must hear: Working For The Weekend
“IT WAS SORT OF A DEVIL’S BARGAIN”

Singer Ann Wilson on the Heart album that reinvented the band.

“I n 1984 we had just sort of washed up on the beach after a big personnel change in the band and a management change. We changed everything, Nancy and I just instinctively felt that we had come to the end of an era. So we had gotten a new bass player and drummer [Mark Andes and Denny Carmassi] and Howard Leese stayed on. We were in a real state of change, so the mood in the band was that our expectations were not real high. We were just trying to re-form; things were kinda chaotic. We had the enthusiasm of Don Grierson, the guy who signed us at Capitol, but we knew that we had to make a hit record or quite possibly we’d find ourselves without a record deal.

“He had a vision for the band that we hadn’t even thought of yet because we were just out there, slogging playing concerts in the country. We weren’t back in the cultural centres, where at that time they were formulating all this new video world and songwriting world, we were out in the middle of America. Don and Capitol were imagining something for us that we couldn’t even guess at yet.

“It took Nancy and I a couple of bangs over the head with a sledgehammer to really understand that [using outside songwriters] was a good thing for us, because we had previously written everything. The type of stuff we were writing was not the type of stuff that was being accepted by radio. So we kept giving our songs to the pile that were under consideration for the Heart record. Maybe, sixty per cent of them were songs that Nance and I wrote, but the forty per cent were the ones that were getting used. That sounds funny, cos you’d think Nance and I would be in the driver’s seat on that, but at that time we were not.

“It was hard, because we really liked the success that it brought – a lot. But we really felt uncomfortable about the fact that we’d worked all those years and written all those songs and it took other people’s songs to get us Number Ones. So it was sort of a devil’s bargain. But I’m not going to lie to you and say that someone else tied our hands and made us do it. We did it of our own free will. It’s just that later on when it became expected of us, that’s when we really went, okay, this is enough.”

“IT WAS JUST AMAZING FUN. AND THEN WE TRIED TO TAKE THEM OUT ON THE ROAD TO RECREATE THAT LIVE. AND WITH ALL THE REAL CONDITIONS OF PLAYING IN THE DEEP SOUTH IN THE EXTREME HEAT AND HUMIDITY, WITH A CORSET AND BIG HEAVY HAIR AND VELVET AND THAT KINDA STUFF, IT BECAME REALLY HARD.”

“The album sounds like a product of its era, but if you listen deeper into the songwriting some of those songs are great. And they translate and they come down the years. That album, I gotta say, glossy as hell, sounds very corporate. And the eighties was corporate, the eighties was driven by cocaine and arrogance, and it fit that bill. And we succeeded in standing on top of the icy mountain.”
28 Fashion By Passion
WHITE SISTER
FM Revolver, 1986
Passion, the group’s second and final album, was even better – less pompous, more melodic and capped by a glorious version of The Beatles’ Ticket To Ride. PE
Must hear: Ticket To Ride

27 Last Of The Runaways
G I A N T
EMI, 1989
The history of AOR is littered with unheralded greatness, and Giant, who recorded this stellar debut, lie among the fallen. At the forefront of the band was Dann Huff, who matched his virtuosity on guitar with a voice made for radio. There is a touch of sad grandeur about Last Of The Runaways that few can match, from the big hit I’ll See You In My Dreams to the diamond chorus of Hold Back The Night. JH
Must hear: Innocent Days

26 No Brakes
JOH N W A I T E
EMI, 1984
The quality of John Waite’s voice and his acute ear for a good song built one of the great, unheralded British rock careers. From The Babys, where he worked with Jonathan Cain, through this solo incarnation that yielded the enduring Missing You, and on to Bad English, where he reunited with Cain alongside Neal Schon, he has made hits. No Brakes sums up his uncomplicated, hook-heavy approach. JH
Must hear: Missing You

25 Paradise Theater
ST Y X
A & M, 1981
Some consider Paradise Theater the last truly great heyday-era Styx album. It saw the band commandeer the abandonment of a run-down local cinema as metaphor for American society as a whole. That might sound unexciting in principle, but songs such as Too Much Time On My Hands and The Best Of Times were quite extraordinary. DL
Must hear: AD 1928/Rockin’ The Paradise

24 Agent Provocateur
FORE N G E R
(Atlantic, 1984)
It started with a bang – Tooth And Nail, one of Foreigner’s heaviest songs. But the true measure of this album is in two of the greatest power ballads of all time: I Want To Know What Love Is, elevated by a gospel choir, a UK and US No.1; and That Was Yesterday, a perfectly crafted song of profound sadness. PE
Must hear: That Was Yesterday

23 Native Sons
STR AN GE W A Y S
(EMI, 1986)
The addition of Terry Brock, an American singer blessed with a golden voice, should have made this Glasgow-based band into superstars. Alas record label issues intervened, but Native Sons remains all all-time cult classic. In his Kerrang! review at the time, Derek Oliver called Native Sons “the greatest and most preciously perfect melodic AOR album of all time”, and today it still sounds incredible. DL
Must hear: Goodnight LA

22 Third Stage
B O S T O N
MCA, 1986
In search of perfection, Boston’s maverick leader Tom Scholz was sued for breach of contract by record company CBS before signing to rival MCA. As a result, Third Stage was his greatest victory, a brilliant concept album (boy-to-man stuff), with the beautiful ballad Amanda hitting No.1 in America. PE
Must hear: Amanda

21 Out Of The Silence
D A R E
A & M, 1985
Dare’s first and best album is so supremely AOR that it features two keyboard players – Darren Wharton, the group’s leader and singer, formerly of Thin Lizzy, and Brian Cox, who later became famous as a scientist and TV presenter. There is epic drama in Abandon and The Raindance, and in King Of Spades a beautiful elegy for Wharton’s late mentor Phil Lynott. PE
Must hear: Abandon

20 Richard Marx
RICHARD MARX
EMI, 1987
In the summer of 1987, who could resist Richard Marx? Chiseled, mulleted and in possession of a collection of instant AOR classics, Marx was everyone’s favourite boy-crush,
The tale of Survivor, Rocky Balboa and the song that shook the world and became a global hit.

Words: Paul Elliott

He played the message on his answering machine several times before he believed what he was hearing. “Hey, Jim!” said a voice in a New York Italian-American accent. “Gimme a call! It’s Sylvester Stallone.”

It was late 1981, and for Jim Peterik, keyboard player, songwriter and founding member of Chicago rock band Survivor, life would never be the same again.

Immediately, Peterik phoned Frankie Sullivan, the guitarist with whom he had formed Survivor in 1977, and told him that one of the biggest movie stars in the world wanted to talk. “Frankie didn’t believe it either,” Peterik recalled with a laugh. “But he came straight to my house, and we made that call together.”

First, Stallone told them of a mutual connection. His brother Frank, a singer, was signed to the same label as Survivor, Scotti Brothers Records. Second, he said that he loved Survivor’s song Poor Man’s Son, the band’s first top-40 hit. Third, he gave them a shot at fame by saying that he needed an anthem just like Survivor's Poor Man’s Son.

Peterik was in the process of replacing the Queen guitarist with whom he had formed Survivor. Immediately, Peterik phoned Frankie Sullivan, the guitarist with whom he had formed Survivor in 1977, and told him that one of the biggest movie stars in the world wanted to talk. “Frankie didn’t believe it either,” Peterik recalled with a laugh. “But he came straight to my house, and we made that call together.”

First, Stallone told them of a mutual connection. His brother Frank, a singer, was signed to the same label as Survivor, Scotti Brothers Records. Second, he said that he loved Survivor’s song Poor Man’s Son, the band’s first top-40 hit. Third, he gave them a shot at fame by saying that he needed an anthem just like Survivor’s Poor Man’s Son.

“I want something for the kids,” Stallone said. “Something fresh and modern, something with a pulse! Can you do it?”

“Something fresh and modern, something with a pulse! Can you do it?”

The following day, Peterik and Sullivan received a video tape containing three minutes of action sequences from Rocky III in which Stallone and co-star Mr T duked it out in the ring to the sound of Queen’s Another One Bites The Dust. “It was just amazing,” Peterik says. “The energy!”

He and Sullivan had to replace the Queen track with something that would match that energy. The answer, a thudding staccato riff, came to Peterik while he was driving. “I saw the punches in my mind: Bam! Bam-bam-bam! Bam-bam-bam! Bam-bam BAM!”

The title for their song was lifted from a phrase in the movie spoken by Rocky’s trainer, Micky Goldmill, played by Burgess Meredith: “Rocky, you gotta keep the eye of the tiger!” This resonated powerfully with Peterik. He told Sullivan: “Man, that is the greatest title in the world!” Stallone informed them that the phrase derived from ancient Chinese. “The eye of the tiger’ is the killer instinct,” Peterik said. “It’s the will to survive, to exceed your roots, to go beyond what anyone thought you could do.” The lyrics he wrote were wonderfully evocative, and, shrewdly, included the name of the band.

When Stallone received the finished track, his response was emphatic: “You guys really did it. It’s a smash!”

But it was a bigger smash than he or the band could have ever imagined. In 1982, Eye Of The Tiger hit No.1 in the US, the UK, Japan and six other countries. And three years later, Peterik got another call from Stallone. “We got Rocky IV,” he said. “You wanna do it again?”

By that time, Survivor had a new singer in place of Dave Bickler, who sang on Eye Of The Tiger. The most famous dude to wear a beret who wasn’t either French or Che Guevara had been replaced by Jimi Jamison.

The song that Peterik and Sullivan wrote for Rocky IV was essentially Eye Of The Tiger Part II. “We wanted that same kind of pulse,” Peterik said. “We had a formula and we weren’t gonna change it.” For this song, Burning Heart, Peterik’s lyrics were inspired by the movie’s Cold War-era plotline, in which Rocky fought Russian boxer Ivan Drago (Dolph Lundgren). Peterik wrote: “Is it East versus West, or man against man?” Jamison sang that line, and indeed the whole song, as if the whole word hung in the balance. Another rock classic was born. And in February 1986, Burning Heart reached No.2 in the US.
For five provincially born guys, writing about America was an aspirational thing. “As a song title, King’s Lynn Girls just doesn’t have the same effect,” Goldsworthy says with a laugh. None of the band had even visited the States, and although they briefly considered relocating there, just like most of their UK AOR counterparts FM’s record company, Epic/CBS, never sent them there to play.

“Our stylists took us to LA and bought me a sleeveless denim jacket and a pair of Levi’s available in any high street,” Overland marvels.

For five provincially born guys, writing about America was an aspirational thing. “As a song title, King’s Lynn Girls just doesn’t have the same effect,” Goldsworthy says with a laugh. None of the band had even visited the States, and although they briefly considered relocating there, just like most of their UK AOR counterparts FM’s record company, Epic/CBS, never sent them there to play.

“Our stylists took us to LA and bought me a sleeveless denim jacket and a pair of Levi’s available in any high street,” Overland marvels.

For five provincially born guys, writing about America was an aspirational thing. “As a song title, King’s Lynn Girls just doesn’t have the same effect,” Goldsworthy says with a laugh. None of the band had even visited the States, and although they briefly considered relocating there, just like most of their UK AOR counterparts FM’s record company, Epic/CBS, never sent them there to play.

“Our stylists took us to LA and bought me a sleeveless denim jacket and a pair of Levi’s available in any high street,” Overland marvels.
17 Michael Bolton
MICHAEL BOLTON
Columbia, 1983

Everybody’s Crazy is Michael Bolton’s masterpiece, but the album he made before it is a classic in its own right, loaded with great songs such as Fool’s Game, Hometown Hero and Can’t Hold On, Can’t Let Go, all sung as only Bolton can. A masterful version of The Supremes hit Back In My Arms Again was a signpost to his future. PE
Must hear: Fool’s Game

16 FM
INDISCREET
Portrait, 1986

Thirty-two years after its release, Indiscreet is still the greatest UK AOR album ever made, filled with perfectly crafted songs including That Girl, Frozen Heart and I Belong To The Night, and Steve Overland’s heroic performance on the record reminds us why he’s nicknamed The Voice. FM’s follow-up, Tough It Out, featuring the Desmond Child-assisted Bad Luck, is another masterpiece of the genre. PE
Must hear: That Girl

15 Street Talk
STEVE PERRY
Columbia, 1984

On this, his first solo album, released when he was still Journey’s singer, Perry mixed soft rock and soul to brilliant effect, scoring a huge US hit with Oh Sherrrie, a shout-out to his then girlfriend. His second solo record, 1994’s For The Love Of Strange Medicine, is as overwrought as its title suggests, but on Street Talk simplicity is genius. PE
Must hear: Oh Sherrrie

14 New England
NEW ENGLAND
Infinity, 1978

Unsurprisingly, they were from New England (Boston, actually, but someone had already nicked that as a band name), and this debut album, co-produced by Paul Stanley of Kiss, is a masterclass in what frontman John Fannon called “power-melodic song-oriented rock”. Hello, Hello, Hello has shades of Jeff Lynne, and Don’t Ever Wanna Lose Ya, a glorious pomp-rock anthem, was a minor US hit that should have made them bigger than Jesus. PE
Must hear: Don’t Ever Wanna Lose Ya

13 Toto
TOTO
Atlantic, 1977

Toto is the sound of a genre beginning to crystalise. Hold The Line an early example of what American radio rock would become. It was trampled by the press when it was released, but the divide between the critics and the public was already apparent as musicians and radio programmers tried to find an audience not served elsewhere. A milestone. JH
Must hear: Hold The Line

12 Foreigner
FOREIGNER
Atlantic, 1977

1977 wasn’t all about punk rock. It was also a defining year for the less fashionable exponents of AOR, with Foreigner’s debut a multimillion-seller. Feels Like The First Time and Cold As Ice were US Top 10 hits, and for the next 10 years the hits kept coming. PE
Must hear: Cold As Ice

11 Welcome To The Real World
MR. MISTER
RCA, 1985

Singer Richard Page almost joined Toto, but instead found fame, albeit fleetingly, with Mr. Mister. This, their second album, a perfect hybrid of melodic rock and new wave, yielded two US No.1s in Broken Wings, a ballad as immaculate as The Cars’ Drive, and Kyrie, a ringing, quasi-spiritual anthem. PE
Must hear: Kyrie
“WE ORDERED A BUNCH OF DOM PERIGNON!”

REO Speedwagon frontman Kevin Cronin on Hi Infidelity.

“I don’t know anyone could have foreseen what was going to happen with that record. I guess the stars were lined up.

“The first time I played Keep On Loving You on the piano, the guys looked at me like I was from a different planet. ‘What are you, Barry Manilow?’ That’s what the song sounded like at first. But it was a really important song for me, very personal, and I wasn’t about to let go of it.

“I kept playing it over and over, until one day Gary [Richrath, guitarist] plugged in his Les Paul and hit these big chords. Honestly, I think he was just trying to drown me out. But I said: ‘Dude, that’s perfect!’ The song had been a little too sweet. It needed that nasty guitar tone. And that’s when the light bulb went on: ‘Ah, that’s how we do this!’ Kevin writes a little folk song, Gary trashes it out, and then you got...’

“It was mind-boggling. We ordered a bunch of Dom Perignon and just yelled like schoolboys! It was awesome! The days of touring in a Chevrolet station wagon were still fresh in our minds. We had the Number-One record when MTV started out, so that just fuelled the phenomenon even more. We weren’t prepared for the level of success and how quickly our lives changed. But to have the Number-One record in America, it was everything that I’d ever hoped for.”

“Keep On Loving You was also the first song where I really exposed my life and my relationship to a certain degree — maybe too much. The chorus is very pretty, but in the verses there’s some nasty stuff in there, man! It was kind of a taboo subject. There are people that use Keep On Loving You as their wedding song. I often think: ‘Hey, did you listen to the verses?’ But what I learned with that song was that the more you expose of your life, the more people will relate to it. That’s what really hit the ball out of the park.

“When Hi Infidelity hit Number One [in February 1981] we were in the midst of a four-night stand at the International Amphitheater in Chicago. To see our album at Number One was mind-boggling. We ordered a bunch of Dom Perignon and just yelled like schoolboys! It was awesome! The days of touring in a Chevrolet station wagon were still fresh in our minds. We had the Number-One record when MTV started out, so that just fuelled the phenomenon even more. We weren’t prepared for the level of success and how quickly our lives changed. But to have the Number-One record in America, it was everything that I’d ever hoped for.”

What made REO Speedwagon’s ninth album their first US No.1 were two hits delivering an iron fist in a velvet glove. For all the melodic uplift in the ballad Keep On Loving You (also US No.1) and the rocker Take It On The Run, the lyrics spoke of love as war. Classic songs, quintessential AOR. PE

Must hear: Keep On Loving You

Before the transformation into superstar soul singer and Mullet King, Michael Bolton rocked. With a voice so powerful that he once auditioned for Black Sabbath, he delivered in Everybody’s Crazy a melodic rock tour de force, with the anthem Save Our Love and the power ballad Call My Name its devastating emotional peaks. PE

Must hear: Save Our Love

The last record Journey made with Steve Perry during his initial and most important time in the band, Raised On Radio is an artistic high point that for many surpasses even Escape and Frontiers in terms of songwriting and performance. Perry’s grip on Raised On Radio is evident: it is a masterclass that cemented him as a vocalist without equal. JH

Must hear: Girl Can’t Help It

With twin-guitar firepower, two great singers and killer songs, Night Ranger’s Dawn Patrol was the best American rock debut since Van Halen’s. A signature sound was defined by the blazing energy of Don’t Tell Me You Love Me and the melodic finesse of Sing Me Away. The record’s unsung hero was geeky keyboard ninja Alan ‘Fitz’ Gerald. PE

Must hear: Don’t Tell Me You Love Me

1982 was the year that Toto ruled the world. Crack session musicians and hit songwriters, they were heavily involved in what became the biggest-selling album of all time, Michael Jackson’s Thriller. Their own album Toto IV was huge too, selling millions via its smash hit singles Rosanna, I Won’t Hold You Back and Africa. A soft-rock behemoth – critics be damned! PE

Must hear: Africa
We had the whole record done, and I said: “Are we missing something?” I had just gotten some new keyboards, they had some interesting sounds. And that’s when I wrote Africa. Bingo!

That song was almost not on the record. But I said to Jeff: “This is so special, I want you to compose a drum loop and make that part of the composition.”

I spent four or five months on the lyrics, trying to get them to feel just right, but when I got to the chorus the words just came out. I stopped and thought: “This is unbelievable. I’m talented, but I’m not that talented. Someone’s using me as a medium here to write this song.”

Do you understand why people find the lyrics in Africa so funny?

Ha ha. Well, what other songs have the words ‘Serengeti’ and ‘Kilimanjaro’ in them?

There are a lot of words in that song, and everybody took a crack at it, but I ended up singing it because I was the only person who could get the words out. There was a joke in the band: next time you write a hit record, make sure the lead singer is singing it.

Bobby Kimball was the lead singer in Toto back then, but he didn’t sing lead on this album’s hit songs.

The self-titled first Toto album was a huge hit. The next two, Hydra and Turn Back, bombed. Were you under serious pressure after that?

Toto IV was kind of our last chance. The record company said: “We want to see if you guys still know how to make hit records.”

Did that pressure feed into the making of the album?

There were times when we got into some very heated arguments about songs, lyrics... everything!

Did you bump heads?

Absolutely. I got to tell you, in the studio with Toto it’s a tough room.

When did you first get the feeling that this album might really have potential?

We went to England to use the London Symphony Orchestra on I Won’t Hold You Back, so we were really going for it. And after we finished Rosanna we knew we had something.

Rosanna had the groove. It was deep in the pocket. It had that blue-eyed soul thing, but with crunchy guitars. You have all these guys putting different things into the blender, and that’s what Toto is.

It’s fair to say that Toto IV was never a favourite with the critics.

Steve Porcaro: I remember the feeling that Toto IV was a do-or-die thing. We had to really deliver.

Did that pressure feed into the making of the album?

It was a democratic band, but Jeff Porcaro [drummer] was the lead spokesman for Toto, and it was pretty much he and I making the decisions.

Did you bump heads?

Absolutely. I got to tell you, in the studio with Toto it’s a tough room.

When did you first get the feeling that this album might really have potential?

We went to England to use the London Symphony Orchestra on I Won’t Hold You Back, so we were really going for it. And after we finished Rosanna we knew we had something.

Rosanna had the groove. It was deep in the pocket. It had that blue-eyed soul thing, but with crunchy guitars. You have all these guys putting different things into the blender, and that’s what Toto is.
If ever there was a hard act to follow, it was Escape, the all-conquering masterpiece that had made Journey the biggest rock act in America. But when the heat was on, these guys didn’t falter. What they delivered with Frontiers was another multi-platinum hit, another classic.

Separate Ways (Worlds Apart), the album’s opening track, is the ultimate heavy melodic rock anthem, its dramatic tone set in Jonathan Cain’s neon-bright keyboard intro, the band blasting at full power, and Steve Perry hitting high notes and a deep emotional intensity that made him the greatest singer of his generation. Faithfully is the definitive power ballad, with Perry’s voice again at its absolute peak. Edge Of The Blade is arguably Journey’s heaviest song. The title track, tricky and unconventional, has a flavour of early-80s Rush. And After The Fall and Send Her My Love are two more supreme ballads from the undisputed masters of the art.

Most extraordinary of all is that this brilliant album could have been even better. In a bizarre decision, two glorious songs, Only The Young and Ask The Lonely, did not make the cut. And while one substitution in their place was the wonderfully atmospheric Troubled Child, the other, Back Talk, was a complete turkey, perhaps the worst song the band ever recorded, and the one flaw in what was otherwise a work of genius.

In 1983, just a year after Survivor hit big with Eye Of The Tiger, the band were in deep shit. Singer Dave Bickler, suffering from damaged vocal cords, got through the next album, Caught In The Game, but his exit from Survivor followed quickly. For Bickler it was heartbreaking, for the band a potential career killer. As keyboard player Jim Peterik said: “Very few bands survive a lead singer transplant.”

But what they found in Jimi Jamison was a guy with a one-in-a-million voice. And what Survivor created in Vital Signs, their first album with Jamison, was a comeback hit and the pinnacle of the band’s career.

“Jimi had the most magical voice I’ve ever heard,” Peterik said. Equally, Jamison was gifted some of the greatest songs ever written by Peterik and guitarist Frankie Sullivan: glorious anthems I Can’t Hold Back and It’s The Singer Not The Song, and the masterful ballad The Search Is Over. Of the latter, Peterik recalled: “To hear Jimi sing the shit out of it, I knew it was a hit.”

Vital Signs was the album on which Survivor reached their creative peak, and Jamison delivered the greatest performance of his life. As Peterik said after the singer’s death in 2014: “Jimi was one of the greats.”

I needed somebody strong enough to stand up to me… If only I’d known! It was the first time I’d worked with a producer who demanded to hear every single track and basic scrap of a song idea. I’d already had years in the business, and viewed that as a terrible invasion of my privacy, but I agreed to it and some great songs came out of that whole brainstorming process.

“Mutt” was very professional; a great, beautiful guy, a bit of an old soul, and he remains somebody I still admire very much. He’s all but retired now. I still harbour a wish to work with him again some day. We haven’t spoken for many, many years, but “Mutt” was a massive part of what became a vital album for Foreigner – maybe the most important one. Even just to meet him and go to dinner again would be great.”

The first three Foreigner albums were all platinum-selling TopFive hits in America, but their fourth went all the way to No.1, selling more than 10 million copies. Aided by genius producer “Mutt” Lange, the band peaked on 4, with kick-ass rock songs in Urgent and Juke Box Hero, and a subtle, deep-reaching ballad in Waiting For A Girl Like You.

I needed somebody strong enough to stand up to me… If only I’d known! It was the first time I’d worked with a producer who demanded to hear every single track and basic scrap of a song idea. I’d already had years in the business, and viewed that as a terrible invasion of my privacy, but I agreed to it and some great songs came out of that whole brainstorming process.

“Mutt” was very professional; a great, beautiful guy, a bit of an old soul, and he remains somebody I still admire very much. He’s all but retired now. I still harbour a wish to work with him again some day. We haven’t spoken for many, many years, but “Mutt” was a massive part of what became a vital album for Foreigner – maybe the most important one. Even just to meet him and go to dinner again would be great.”

The album made by boffin Tom Scholz in his basement was the biggest-selling debut of all time until Appetite For Destruction a decade later. Somehow, from such narrow confines Scholz conjured giant soundscapes, achieving melodic-rock perfection in the smash hit single More Than A Feeling, its emotional intensity heightened by the majestic wail of singer Brad Delp.

I needed somebody strong enough to stand up to me… If only I’d known! It was the first time I’d worked with a producer who demanded to hear every single track and basic scrap of a song idea. I’d already had years in the business, and viewed that as a terrible invasion of my privacy, but I agreed to it and some great songs came out of that whole brainstorming process.

“Mutt” was very professional; a great, beautiful guy, a bit of an old soul, and he remains somebody I still admire very much. He’s all but retired now. I still harbour a wish to work with him again some day. We haven’t spoken for many, many years, but “Mutt” was a massive part of what became a vital album for Foreigner – maybe the most important one. Even just to meet him and go to dinner again would be great.”

I needed somebody strong enough to stand up to me… If only I’d known! It was the first time I’d worked with a producer who demanded to hear every single track and basic scrap of a song idea. I’d already had years in the business, and viewed that as a terrible invasion of my privacy, but I agreed to it and some great songs came out of that whole brainstorming process.

“Mutt” was very professional; a great, beautiful guy, a bit of an old soul, and he remains somebody I still admire very much. He’s all but retired now. I still harbour a wish to work with him again some day. We haven’t spoken for many, many years, but “Mutt” was a massive part of what became a vital album for Foreigner – maybe the most important one. Even just to meet him and go to dinner again would be great.”

I needed somebody strong enough to stand up to me… If only I’d known! It was the first time I’d worked with a producer who demanded to hear every single track and basic scrap of a song idea. I’d already had years in the business, and viewed that as a terrible invasion of my privacy, but I agreed to it and some great songs came out of that whole brainstorming process.

“Mutt” was very professional; a great, beautiful guy, a bit of an old soul, and he remains somebody I still admire very much. He’s all but retired now. I still harbour a wish to work with him again some day. We haven’t spoken for many, many years, but “Mutt” was a massive part of what became a vital album for Foreigner – maybe the most important one. Even just to meet him and go to dinner again would be great.”

I needed somebody strong enough to stand up to me… If only I’d known! It was the first time I’d worked with a producer who demanded to hear every single track and basic scrap of a song idea. I’d already had years in the business, and viewed that as a terrible invasion of my privacy, but I agreed to it and some great songs came out of that whole brainstorming process.

“Mutt” was very professional; a great, beautiful guy, a bit of an old soul, and he remains somebody I still admire very much. He’s all but retired now. I still harbour a wish to work with him again some day. We haven’t spoken for many, many years, but “Mutt” was a massive part of what became a vital album for Foreigner – maybe the most important one. Even just to meet him and go to dinner again would be great.”
I taught myself about engineering and producing slowly, built some recording equipment and I started in. And immediately the results were so much better. Within a year I had come up with the songs – and more importantly, the recordings of the songs – that would form the basis of the first Boston album.

You did all of this in your home studio?

Yeah, that was in the basement of my apartment house [laughs]. Not your ideal place to record the master for an album. But it was the ideal place for me to work.

What changed when Boston signed to Epic Records?

Nothing! When I got the contract it was totally unexpected, because I'd had nothing but failure up to that point. But I made a promise to myself that this was what worked, this is what enabled me to create music that was worthy of being listened to, and this is the only way that I'm going to do it.

Did the record company trust your instincts?

Oh no. The record company had very different ideas. I was going to be produced by their producer in a major studio, blah blah blah. And I quickly nixed all that – with the help of John Boylan, who was their choice of producer. I actually made the record in my basement, the same way I had made the demos that got me signed, while John had a decoy of some people out in Los Angeles showing up at Capitol Records' studios every day.

But you did record one track for the album out in LA, with a full band line-up.

Yeah, that was Let Me Take You Home Tonight. But the rest of that record I did alone in my basement, with Brad [Delp] coming in from time to time.

Brad was such a huge part of that album. His singing – on More Than A Feeling especially – was out of this world.

I started out in the early seventies working with other musicians, but it did not produce the result I was looking for.

Meaning what?

I never felt that I got what I was hearing in my mind for the songs. I found that instead of focusing on my imagination and where it would take me with the music, I was focusing on what the other people in the room were thinking about what I was doing. And I found that the interpretation by other musicians was changing the idea that I had, and it was not necessarily changing it in a good way. I hoped that it would add to it, but in fact what it did is it limited it.

When did you decide to go it alone?

It was at the end of 1973. I said to myself: I’m never going to play music with a band again for the purpose of trying to get people to hear it, because it doesn’t get presented the way it could and should be. I knew nothing about how other people recorded an album. But I said from now on I’m going to muddle on by myself.
Journey

ESCAPE
(Columbia, 1981)

AOR’s shimmering and colossal peak, Escape may have its edges dulled by the familiarity of its best-known songs, yet that should not detract from the album’s majesty. It pulls together everything that is glorious and important about the genre and distills it sublimely. They may have unkindly christened Steve Perry ‘the duck’ after some of those high notes, but the critics are simply eating his dirt. Escape rules. JH

Must hear: Don’t Stop Believin’
Almost every album that comes to define its genre feels in a way like it has always existed. It coalesces various elements—a sound, a feeling, a particular moment in time—and makes them solid. Think of Nevermind or Appetite For Destruction or The Dark Side Of The Moon, and they seem to hold within them the seeds of what the genre is and where it might go.

It’s the same with Escape. You can argue forever as to whether it is AOR’s greatest album, or even if it’s Journey’s best (Raised On Radio is superior in many ways), but it is inarguably the genre’s defining record. Its grip on the culture has grown stronger through the years. From the moment that Don’t Stop Believin’ was used as the final piece of music in The Sopranos to the endless cover versions of Open Arms on American TV talent shows, Escape has become a piece of music that has lasted somehow. The songs are bigger than we are.

Cain, formerly of The Babys, was Journey’s missing piece. When he replaced Greg Rolie, the band left behind their vestigial jazz-rock leanings and refocused on the songs. For a record as apparently seamless as Escape, Journey were an interesting factional mix, cliquey and at times suspicious of one another. They were held together by the force of personality of Herbie Herbert, the manager who had brought Steve Perry to the group almost four years before. Ever since, Perry had been engaged in a battle for the spotlight with Neal Schon, around whose guitar playing Journey had originally been built. The addition of Cain, who quickly fell into a writing partnership with Perry, increased the creative tension: “The friction brings the heat,” as Perry described it.

“When I joined,” Cain said, “I was able to help put the pieces more solidly together. I think I maybe oiled it and everything flowed better. It was that mix of different personalitites—they had a kind of swagger to what they did that I really liked. Neal’s guitar playing was incredible. Perry’s voice was in its prime. Steve Smith and Ross Valory laid it down. They were a machine. I remember they had this rehearsal warehouse they used in Oakland, and the first time I went there all of my gear was set up. I’d never had that before. The band sounded like a rocket taking off.”

Cain was a conduit between Schon and Perry. “Neal had a lot of rock’n’roll ideas that I would go through and maybe tweak a little and present them to Steve in a more nuanced way. Neal had a lot of unstructured melody in his head. I could sometimes add to those melodies and all of a sudden Steve would know what to do with them.”

On their first day of writing together, in the attic of their road manager’s apartment in San Francisco, Perry played the melody for Who’s Crying Now on a cassette he’d been storing his ideas on, and within an afternoon the song was written. “We had an instant chemistry,” said Cain. At Perry’s house they came up with Open Arms from a piano part that John Waite had rejected for The Babys. “Too bad for John Waite,” Perry remarked after hearing it.

“I think it was probably emotionally not so comforting for Neal to see us writing together,” says Perry. “But then we wrote with Neal, too. The Don’t Stop Believin’ stuff we all came up with together. There was a lot of stuff he was involved with co-writing—Stone In Love, with that great guitar riff, that one came from Neal.”

Neal brought the fire and attitude,” Cain said. “I wasn’t conscious of just writing with Steve or just with Neal. It was about the three of us. Together we made it Journey.”

Journey rode their creative high, yet even the most cursory listener to Escape reveals the aural perfectionism that Perry in particular obsessed over. They were all sound freaks, none more so than the singer, whose knowledge of recording techniques and reproduction were matched only by his desire to get down on tape the things he was hearing in his head. He recalled spending two days in the studio getting the right ‘A’ sound on the ‘arms’ line of Open Arms, and trying to keep his spectacular longer notes on Don’t Stop Believin’ exactly in tune.

Perry dictated the type of vinyl used for the first pressings of the record, which came out in July 1981, just two weeks after Foreigner’s 4. Tied by serendipity, those two albums would produce AOR’s high-water mark. Journey were touring America by private plane and selling out football stadiums years before Bon Jovi and Guns N’ Roses surfaced the same wave, and they encountered all of the same rock-star strains and excesses.

I once asked Jonathan Cain how Escape had affected them. “Well,” he said, “I got divorced, Steve broke up with Sherrrie [Swafford, the Sherrie of Oh Shere], families started having an impact, people wanted to do different things. Frontiers [released 20 months later] was great—I call Escape and Frontiers ‘the twins’. But it became all-consuming. It couldn’t sustain.”

History has been kind to Escape. As far back as 1988 the readers of Kerrang! voted it AOR’s greatest album, and there it remains, probably in perpetuity. But beyond the confines of genre it has enjoyed an afterlife bathed in nostalgia for the version of American youth that it captured, a time long gone except in the memory. There, Escape lives.
Marcus King isn’t what you might expect as the youngest in a Deep South musical bloodline. His father and grandfather are popular players in South Carolina, but the 22-year-old has long forged his own path. His third album, Carolina Confessions, is no bog-standard rootsy fare; his take on southern music is richly textured, nodding to Little Feat, the Isley Brothers, Steely Dan, Stevie Ray Vaughan and many more. And it’s crammed with worldly character (reflecting on the breakdown of a relationship, like all his records).

Ask him about his favourite records and he veers between eras and styles. “Pet Sounds by the Beach Boys would be one,” he begins thoughtfully. “Lonerism by Tame Impala is another, Live At Fillmore East by the Allman Brothers… I’m all over the place as far as inspiration goes.”

He’s an articulate interviewee and exudes kindly southern courtesy, despite having the sort of hazy voice that’s either like he’s just waking up or been steeped in pot. A massive Stetson and bright blue shades add to his look that’s part Warren Haynes, part spiritual guru.

So far things are working out well for him. Derek Trucks and Warren Haynes are fans and mentors. Back home he’s hosted his own two-day festival, The Marcus King Band Family Reunion, for the past two years. Tonight’s London gig is packed, and record-label types chatter excitedly about bigger shows in the works. When he eventually goes on stage, the shades come off and he and his band deliver a dextrous fusion of southern rock’n’roll, soul and jazz. This is where he’s most at home, and has been for most of his short life.

King’s old-soul quality has deep roots, and doesn’t apply just to his music. The youngest of two, his childhood was split between suburban Greenville, South Carolina, and the rest of his family up in the Blue Ridge Mountains. There, King would jam old gospel hymns on the porch with his father, aunts, uncles and grandparents. There was always a guitar in the house, and music was part of the fabric of life. “I was also getting spoonfed the Allman Brothers, Marshall Tucker Band, Elmore James, Robert Johnson, what my dad was into,” King explains. “And my grandfather was turning me on to George Jones, Merle Haggard, Waylon Jennings…”

Enviable musical foundations for sure, but it left him out of step with his contemporaries. “I didn’t have any friends my own age,” he tells us. “All my friends were people like my grandparents. And when I did start making friends, when I’d go over I’d end up playing cards with their parents, cos the conversation was more stimulating. So I just had to grow up really quickly.”

Performing in his father’s blues band, and at the local pentecostal church, aided the process. But although by this point he was listening mostly to powerhouse vocalists like Billie Holiday, Janis Joplin and Aretha Franklin, he was too shy to sing... himself. So he stuck to the guitar, or drums, whenever he could. Then, when King was 13 a close friend was killed in a car accident and his perspective shifted forever.

“She was a dear friend,” he says. “I realised at that point that I couldn’t express myself any further with just guitar.”

Armed with this new resolve, he started his own band and began singing and writing his own songs. Soon he was making decent money playing gigs in local bars, “enough to help with bills an’ stuff”, for which he did all the booking and promoting himself.

“It was hard to get people to take me seriously,” he recalls. “I was fifteen and all the cats in my band were between thirty-five and fifty, cos I wanted older professional people that wanted to work.”

He’s since replaced them with the younger band he has today, who he “poached” from other groups.

School life didn’t improve, however. Disinterest, tardiness and falling asleep in class after gig nights led to threats of juvenile detention centres.

“Ive always loved learning, if it was something I felt was gonna benefit me later on,” he reasons.

“So in English I would excel because I wanted to expand my vocabulary to benefit what I’d already decided to be. But it became frustrating, because they would treat me as if I was a delinquent. I really wasn’t, I was just disinterested.”

In the end the thing that got him through high school (“well, almost”) was an elective class in jazz theory and performance. There he became immersed in the kind of sounds that form a big part of his music today.

“That was my saving grace, man,” he beams. “Five times a week I’d go to learn about this fantastic style of music that was birthed on American soil. I thought it was such a hip thing, I’d be learning all these cool jazz standards and really learning music theory. That’s what got me through.”

Although he has happy memories of family jams and supportive relatives, King’s early life appears to be shrouded in a cloak of sadness. His mother left when he was four, but remained “in and out of the picture”, and he concedes that there was “a lot going on at home”. As a child he saw a therapist a few times, and at one point (much later) contemplated pursuing psychiatry himself – or the priesthood. He keeps the details guarded, but it seems safe to say that the emotional weight of his music is informed by real pain.

“I love my mother dearly, but that was a hard thing for me when I was younger,” he says.

“Those were difficult times, and there were a lot of things that happened when I was a kid that weren’t ideal, y’know, and it kinda seemed like things would never get better at some point. But they did, so I was able to create from that pain. All I ever want to tell people is if you have any kind of hurt, you need to find some kind of outlet or else you will implode.”

On the back of Carolina Confessions, King and his band are poised for more shows in 2019, and he’s looking to move to Nashville, having fallen in love with the place while recording there.

“There’s still things that are on my heart, that moulded me into who I am, that I still haven’t figured out how to put into words,” he muses, part anxious youth, part wise old sage. “And that’s a constant reminder that sometimes the journey is more important than the destination.”

Carolina Confessions is out now via Snakefarm Records.

---

“Sometimes the journey is more important than the destination.”

Marcus King

CLASSICROCKMAGAZINE.COM  79
As he gears up for the release of his new solo album, the guitarist reflects on being a morning person, struggling with down time, the joys of travel and what it feels like being the son of Superman.
quietest improvisation that any band has ever done. It goes through all sorts of techniques; jazz fusion, psychedelic. And to Phil's [Collins] credit, he was able to do the right thing behind all of these disparate, angular-sounding riffs and salvos and make it swing. It's a real adventure and I just love it.

I USED TO WORK MYSELF INTO THE GROUND MAKING MUSIC
Spectral Mornings was the first solo album I was hugely confident about. There was a great feeling in the team, we had a lot of laughs, and we recorded in Holland in sub-zero temperatures where all you could do was work. It was impossible to sleep. We'd get back at three or four in the morning and then the cleaners would come in at six and make a very real din upstairs. So I did that album on very little sleep.

I had a history of falling over doing albums in those days. I would keep working and working and I'd end up in hospital or unable to move, literally. So at the end of Spectral Mornings people were sending me back mixes and I'm hanging on to the walls at home going: “A bit more tambourine in the left-hand corner!” I was just trying to give it everything. I wasn't very sensible, but that helps to bring something to it.

I STILL FIND IT VERY HARD TO DO DOWN TIME
I suppose I don't really do that much relaxing – all work and no play. I'm aware that the clock is ticking, I think it's the same for my brother as well. He's doing the same thing where he's coming up with an album all the time, and I say 'how's that' and he's on to the next one. We Hackett brothers are cut from the same cloth in a way.

MY FATHER WAS AN AMAZING MAN
My dad was an extraordinary, accomplished guy. There were twenty things that he was capable of doing, each of which could have been a career for him. If only I'd inherited more of those things. But it's a bit like being son of Superman. I came away with one gift, which was to be able to fly on the guitar. My dad was able to do many more things – jump out of aeroplanes, play cricket and football to an extraordinary standard, make furniture, paint... He had all these gifts. But I seem to be a specialist in one area, and the other jobs that I had tended to get fired from. I was pretty useless.

MUSIC MADE SENSE TO ME FROM A VERY EARLY AGE
I was trying to be just like my dad, as he was so musical. I was two and trying to play the mouth organ just like him, and even as a two year old I took it very seriously. My mother tells me I used to have this little case, and take it out on the Tube. She said I used to play the same tune over and over again. I got a chromatic when I was five and my repertoire was Dixon Of Dock Green on a good day, you don't want to know the rest. But I started winning bets and taking money off people by playing the national anthem through my nose. I got an idea that maybe this music lark might be a good wheeze for when I got older. I started messing around with the guitar when I was twelve. I got really interested when I was fourteen, when I was big enough to get my arms around this huge guitar that my dad had with a brutal action and terrible strings. But I fought on – and the fight's still going on. I was playing something yesterday and I was fighting for every phrase, and I thought: “I've got to crack this again.”

I'M HAPPY LOOKING FORWARD
I figured I have the choice of honouring the past or taking people into the future, and I'll do both those things for lots of reasons. It’s a privilege to do the stuff I once believed in – I don’t do anything I don’t believe in. But I am flexible. I have to be. It’s nice to be able to do both, it’s nice to keep the museum doors open. But beyond the money there are all sorts of other things going on. I am really proud of the new album and I’ll be doing lots of it at some point. It’s just steps in an ongoing journey. The important thing is to keep going and stick to your guns. It’s a great joy to do that whether it’s old or new. It’s all part of the same spirit that drives it. It’s still the same vessel, and time is extraordinarily elastic. If I’m doing Selling England, I won’t be thinking “This stuff is how old?” It’s forty-six years ago, which is extraordinary. But you have to trust yourself, and bet on yourself, and that only comes with time.

“I started winning bets and taking money off people by playing the national anthem through my nose.”

AS WELL AS BACK
I started messing around with the guitar when I was twelve. I got really interested when I was fourteen, when I was big enough to get my arms around this huge guitar that my dad had with a brutal action and terrible strings. But I fought on – and the fight’s still going on. I was playing something yesterday and I was fighting for every phrase, and I thought: “I’ve got to crack this again.”

Before they were three: Hackett with Genesis in 1973.

At The Edge of Light is out on January 25 via InsideOut. Steve Hackett tours the UK in November.
EVERGREENS DO NOT SUFFER FROM ALZHEIMER’S.

Carol is no longer who she used to be.

She no longer recognises Nancy, her sister, or Jim, her husband. Most of the time it’s as though she isn’t aware of the things going on around her.

But when Nancy carefully puts headphones over Carol’s ears and plays her most beloved song, her sister’s eyes light up. She gently sways to the beat of the song, she even remembers the dance routine. She may nudge Jim’s arm. Or tell him what a fun guy he is. For the duration of that song, she’s back again. For 4:35, she’s Carol.
1. Robbie Fulks & Linda Gail Lewis

   Wild Wild Wild

   It's wild alright, in a lovably 50s-inspired sort of way. Grammy nominee Fulks and his partner in crime Lewis have cooked up a hearty gumbo of rockabilly tones, honky-tonk piano and the kind of vocal harmonies that would make Johnny Cash and his missus smile approvingly.

   From Wild! Wild! Wild! https://robbiefulks.bandcamp.com

2. Ha Ha Tonka

   Race To The Bottom

   A soaring indie roots-rock ballad, from a Missouri group described as sitting "at the crossroads of Americana and indie, where Alabama meets Arcade Fire". Lead singer Brian Roberts is a cancer survivor who's criticised the American healthcare system, and for all its prettiness this track feels quietly urgent in sentiment.

   From Heart-Shaped Mountain www.hahatonkamusic.com

3. Ruby Boots

   Believe In Heaven

   Aussie singer Rex Chilcott, aka Ruby Boots, is now a Music City resident, and this record was tracked in Dallas with hotshot collective the Texas Gentlemen. Swirling together a cool mix of outlaw sensibilities (twangy Americana, gutsy rock'n'roll, garage grit) this is the renegade side of roots music. And we like it.

   From Don't Talk About It www.rubybootsmusic.com

4. Laura Jane Grace & The Devouring Mothers

   Apocalypse Now (& Later)

   A slice of troubadour goodness from Against Me!'s Laura Jane Grace and her rootsy, Tom Petty-nodding new band. At just over two minutes, maybe this is what Americana sounds like on a punk schedule?

   From Bought To Rot https://laurajanegracethedevouringmothers.bandcamp.com/

5. Sarah Shook & The Disarmers

   New Ways To Fail

   'If you had your way I'd be some kind of proper ladyee..' quoth North Carolina country-punk troubadour Sarah Shook, in the kind of drawl that suggests she'd sooner tell her subject to go do one. Dulcet noises that pack an emotionally raw punch.

   From Years www.disarmers.com

6. William Elliott Whitmore

   Busted

   Your 'bills are due and the baby needs shoes'. What are you gonna do? If you’re William Elliott Whitmore, you write a song about it. Inspired lyrically by family life on a farm in Iowa, his music paints alt-country/folk pictures of very human strife.

   From Kilonova www.williamelliottwhitmore.com

7. Luke Winslow-King

   Chicken Dinner

   There’s a Paul Simon-esque lightness of touch to Winslow-King’s mesh of blues, Stax soul and rock’n’roll. Born in Michigan but heavily informed by 15 years in New Orleans, he cuts a smooth musical figure.

   From Blue Mesa www.lukewinslowking.com

8. Vandoliers

   Troublemaker

   Galloping, rattling guitars, blasts of brass and fiddle, pleasingly shouty vocals... We imagine this being a hoot at a house party, at that sweaty point in the early hours when everyone’s having a good knees-up and long-since given up trying to be cool.

   From Forever http://vandoliers.com/

9. Barrence Whitfield & The Savages

   Tall Black & Bitter

   Ahh, the sweet, swinging sound of classic old-school 12-bar blues getting driven - in a stolen Chevy - down to some hoppin’ dive bar in the South. God bless you, Barrence Whitfield and your Savages.

   From Soul Flowers Of Titan http://barrencewhitfieldsavages.com

10. Jon Langford's Four Lost Souls

    Natchez Trace

    Welchman and Bloodshot staple Langford cut his teeth in punk bands, but swiftly made his name as one of the first people to really combine punk and country in single delicious musical dishes, like this one.

    From Four Lost Souls https://jonlangford.bandcamp.com/

11. Murder By Death

    Bloom

    Stylish, atmospheric indie rock from Indiana, mixing synths and other subtle electronic touches into driving, roots-laced guitars and drums. The sort of ambitious but underdog-ish tones that U2 would have killed for.

    From The Other Shore https://murderbydeath.com/

12. Cory Branan

    Imogene

    A nostalgic reflection on young love that didn’t work out. In the tradition of American blues with beards and/or tattoos and acoustic guitars’ (Ryan Adams, Chuck Ragan) one should never overlook Cory Branan. Especially not on the strength of such stirring cocktails of indie-pop rock, roots and Americana as this one.

    From Adios www.corybranan.com

13. Banditos

    Healin’ Slow

    As we approach the end of this sampler, a proper slowie for you. And what a gorgeous one this is at the hands of southern six-piece Banditos. Singer Mary Beth Richardson is the star turn here, mixing old and new soul into a refreshingly unclichéd country ballad, which climaxes in beautifully chest-swelling fashion.

    From Visionland www.banditosband.com

14. The Yawpers

    Mon Dieu

    From noisiest Denver, a tantalisingly unhinged hybrid of dark country, Cramps/MCS/Stooges-y garage blues and punked-up aggression. Thought countryfied music was all plaid and Jesus? Think again.

    From Boy In A Well www.theyawpers.com

15. Scott H Biram

    Long Old Time

    We complete our Bloodshot tour with blues harmonica and mournful country sentiments, all bound up in a velvety southern gothic package. Think the White Buffalo-meets-old Western soundtrack.

    From The Bad Testament http://scotthbiram.com/

Get More Classic Rock-Curated Tracks...

Head over to our brand-new updated website at www.classicrockmagazine.com to hear all the latest - and hottest - rock songs, from artists young and old. We’ve got dozens of videos, streams and free downloads for your delectation. You’ll need to check the site on a daily basis, because the music comes thick and fast. Plus you can vote for your fave track!
Iron Maiden

Have the heavy metal juggernaut’s first four albums stood the test of time?
Thunder

Please Remain Seated

BMG

Thunder stripped back and laid bare.

Twenty-eight years ago, I sat on Thunder’s tour bus outside the Paradiso in Amsterdam. It was late, and even while some girls tried to pull him away, guitarist Luke Morley wanted to play me a new song he’d written for their second album. Moments like these aren’t rare, and I was ready to run rather than listen to half a musical idea bolstered by a muddy mix. I couldn’t have been more wrong. The keening demo version of Low Life in High Places was a beautiful sketch of a song, filled with promise and life. So much so that the finished version never sounded quite as good to me when parent album Laughing On Judgement Day finally arrived.

That song reappears on Please Remain Seated, this time piano-led before it turns into a mournful elegy buoyed by a male voice choir; it is, remarkably, the unexpected left that feels right. This collection of reworked songs from the Thunder catalogue mostly eschews the straight acoustic cover for gentle swing, blues and the occasional jazz note, from a band live in the studio, reflecting on a remarkable musical life well lived.

Philip Wilding

Papa Roach

Who Do You Trust?

ELEVEN SEVEN MUSIC

Cali nu metal grunts attempt to keep up with the times. Modern rock bands have had to evolve to prosper – rope in a rapper here, swap a guitarist for an electronics whizz there, deck yourself out in geometric-print shirts…

Who Do You Trust? is Papa Roach’s not entirely convincing attempt to muscle in on the action. Traces of their old sound remain, but for the most part they’ve gone for the pop jugular. With their rattling digital rhythms and processed guitars, Elevate and Top Of The World come on like a TK Maxx Imagine Dragons. Not a crime, true, but the sheer distance between the old boxy, possessed-preacher highs and drummer Roach’s not entirely convincing (love you Accent, he’s oddly charming. He’s at his best on the mighty title track, in which chainsaw guitars compete against clattering drums and Wobble’s delightfully borkers musings on Fred Astaire, the Black Death, Ringo Starr and creationists. Nothing else comes close to it, and Wobble’s festiveness remains undimmed.

John Auntwood

Baskery

Coyote & Sirens

MOTHER TARANTULA

Salvaged songs from the Bondesson sisters.

Due to a music industry in turmoil Coyote & Sirens, Baskery’s fourth album, almost never saw the light of day. Signed to a major label and relocated to Los Angeles from their Nashville base, the Swedish folk-rock band of sisters Greta, Stella and Sunniva Bondesson ended up out on their ear and fighting to get their songs back when the execs holding the purse strings got cold feet about the whole thing.
Thankfully, justice prevailed, and so we have this collection of Americana with a distinctly Nordic twist, a sense rather than spectacular, but its high points are well worth experiencing.

Bring Me The Horizon

The Old Guys SOUTHERN DOMESTIC

Vocalist’s tributes to men of standing and repute.

There really is no one quite like Amy Rigby. Despite having both a voice and penchant for American melodies that suggests the work of Gillian Welch or Laura Cantrell, Rigby has an edge and force to her work that suggests Beggars Banquet Songs or Bob Dylan at his most Judas-y. Combine that with a penchant for rough-edged production, the occasional presence of husband Eric Goulden on guitar, and a collection of songs which are both wistful and acerbic, and you have the Old Guys. Like a one-woman garage-band Joni Mitchell, Amy Rigby sings about, well, old guys – there’s from philiproth@gmail to rzimmerman@aol.com, which imagines Roth emailing Dylan about the latter’s Nobel-prize conversation (“When they lay that medal on your wrinkled heart”), there’s a tribute song called Robert Altman; and there’s The Old Guys itself, a Stoney eulogy to the old dudes. Ending on the chiming rocker One Off (another tribute song to some other guy), The Old Guys is a kind of tribute album that deserves a kind of tribute album all of its own.

Dog Eat Dog

Brand New Breed

Nineties rap-rock C-listers’ unnecessary return:

Hats off to Dog Eat Dog for making a comeback record that nobody asked for. Brand New Breed, a compilation of two gig-only EPs, arrives 13 years after the New Jersey band’s last album, Wanted, and 25 years after their flash-in-the-pan popular debut All Boro Kings. Their Beastie Boys-in-clown-shoes shirt hasn’t aged well, which is saying something given it was pretty ropey first around. The arthritic rap-rock of XVV and the anemic, island-hopping dub of Lumpy Dog fizzes with all the urban cred of a CBC newsreaders’ conference, while Emo Joe Baby’s brass-assisted punk hangs in every sense of the term. In its favour, Brand New Breed is mercifully short at eight tracks. They could have made it even shorter by cutting the risible acoustic versions of 90s ‘hits’ Isms and Rocky. Or just done everyone a solid and not bothered at all.

DarWin

Origin Of Species

It’s 2028, and post-nuclear planet Earth is ecologically wrecked. A survivor, DarWin, is transformed by some women into a time-travelling human/computer. Naturally he embarks on a quest to save the world and find his family. It’s an endearingly daft (after its opening tsunami of Pet Sounds-style wizardry, Gummy Bear begins “Gummy bear, do you even care?”), and there’s a graphic novel to go with the album, but musically it’s watertight and its fearsome guitars are underpinned by Crosby, Stills & Nash-style West Coast harmonies. It’s the brainchild of veteran drummer Simon Phillips and Elton John’s current bassist Matt Bissonette, and at its best it’s enormous: the seven-minute Escape The Maze encompasses Steve Vai-esque guitars, orchestras and relentless drumming. At the end of it all, DarWin have saved the concept album as well as the planet.

---

Emma Johnston

Bring Me The Horizon

Amy Rigby

Dog Eat Dog

DarWin

By Dave Ling
The Bevis Frond
We’re Your Friends, Man

It would be a hard heart that didn’t warm to the Bevis Frond’s “twenty-somethingth” (his words) album from its opening verses, which propose that it’s ‘the sound of being left behind’. It ‘doesn’t justify the time it took’, it continues, ‘but I hope that you enjoy it.’ It’s difficult not to, as Nick Saloman’s guitar-slinging psych-rock adventure moves into its fourth decade with a (somewhat overlapping) 90 minutes of sensitive, surreal lyrics and wailing wig-outs which make J Mascis (a professed fan, as was Kurt Cobain) sound like Julian Bream. So np-roaring is Saloman’s soloing that you wonder why Crazy Horse don’t get him in while Neil’s on honeymoon or something. His voice a brittle echo of Robert Wyatt, he frolics through bruisng barrages and more introspective spells, wryly mulling over ageing, acceptance and the universe, until climaxing with the 13-minute Hendrix maelstrom of You’re On Your Own. You’ll enjoy it.

Chris Roberts

Ouzo Bazooka
Transporter // STOLEN BOY
Israeli psychers hit their stride on third record.

Already spreading their reputation far beyond their native Tel Aviv, these exponents of ‘Middle Eastern psych rock’ will surely continue to make friends with Transporter, a more infectious record than its predecessor, 2016’s more laid-back Simoom. Opening track It’s A Sin, with its insistent two-chord riff and ‘Ah-oooo’ vocal hook, is sure to lodge itself, ear worm-like, in your head after a couple of listens. The lacing of dozy organ and synth sounds plus a cameo or two from evocative Middle Eastern instrumentation help firm up a musical identity that’s increasingly distinctive, and its offset by lyrics as intriguing as ‘Dracula is drinking Coke, global warming is a joke’. And while on Killing Me and Trip Train chief songwriter Uri Brauner Kinnot shows his talent for garage pop, on Space Camel there’s a little R&B groove underpinning it all.

Johnny Sharp

Venom
Storm The Gates // SPINEFARM
Still crazy after all these years.

In the late-90s, when Conrad Lant, aka Cronos, returned to his rightful place as frontman of Satan-invoking headbangers Venom, he was bluntly dismissive of bands that had worshipped his own. Earlier that decade, Norwegian black metal – inspired by and named after Venom’s seminal 1982 album – had developed in a cult-like scene, with band members committing arson attacks on churches, the violence culminating in the grisly murder of Mayhem’s leader, Oystein Aarseth, by rival Varg Vikernes of the band Burzum. “If you make music you’re a musician,” Lant said. “But if you kill someone you’re just a murderer.”

Norwegian black metal was an unwanted legacy for Venom, entirely at odds with the pride Lant felt in his band’s influence on Metallica, Slayer and subsequent exponents of extreme music. He also described the Norwegian bands as fraudulent. “There’s only one black metal band,” he said, “and that’s Venom.” What he had not anticipated was the farcical situation he now finds himself in – as leader of one of two versions of Venom.

A rival band named Venom Inc. features the two other members of the classic Venom line-up that made Black Metal – guitarist Jeff Dunn (alias Mantas) and drummer Tony Bray (Abaddion) – plus bassist/vocalist Tony ‘The Demolition Man’ Dolan, who replaced Lant in Venom in the late 80s. The first Venom Inc. album, Av, released in 2017, contained echoes of the past in the punk-metal noise mixed with industrial rock textures. But in Venom’s glory days Lant was always the dominant figure – his voice a mighty roar, and his monstrous bass sound once memorably described as “the pumping black heart of Venom”. And it’s his OTT persona – a Geordie Gene Simmons – that makes his Venom the genuine article.

Storm The Gates is the third album Lant has made with guitarist Stuart ‘Rage’ Dixon and drummer Danny ‘Dante’ Needham. And while this trio play with more cohesion than the famously ragged original line-up, the dark power of old still resonates. The album’s opening track, Bring Out Your Dead, is a bludgeoning attack. A slew of fast songs hark back to Venom’s savage 1981 debut Welcome To Hell. And in the two most atmospheric numbers – the slow, grinding Destroyer and the Slayer-esque I Dark Lord – Lant plays the bogeyman to chilling effect.

Venom’s legend was built on the unholy trinity of Welcome To Hell, Black Metal and At War With Satan. In Conrad Lant, now aged 56, the fire still burns.

Paul Elliott

Metal Church
Dammed If You Do
NUCLEAR BLAST

Songs of praise.

This is album number 12 from these metal stalwarts, and if it underlines just one thing then it’s that principal composer Kurdt Vanderhoof is an unstoppable riff machine. Leading very much from the front with vocalist Mike Howe confidently riding shotgun, the crunching power and invention on offer is refreshing and welcome, an affirmation that this dynamic duo are something of a classic thrash dream team.

When they’re joyfully cracking heads on Guiltline, the title track, The Block Things and By The Numbers, or cranking out the delightfully vintage Accept-like Monkey Finger, things are just peachy: tuneful, hook-laden, gritty. Revolution Underway shows that they can turn up the melody when they really want to, but the real fun lies with songs like daft closer The War Electric, 10,000 volts of thrashing comedy menace – more than enough to make up for the burn note struck by Out Of Balance and its rather odd chorus. Altogether this is a battle-scared victory.

Johnny Sharp

Slim Chance
New Cross Road // FISHPOOL
Lane rangers rove again.

Even 21 years after his death, Ronnie Lane’s gypsy spirit continues to thrive in the capable hands of Slim Chance, the band he formed after leaving Faces in 1973 (further immortality to be clinched with 2019’s consummate box set).

Having reconvened 15 years after Lane succumbed to multiple sclerosis in 1997, Slim Chance still revolves around accordionist Charlie Hart, guitarist Steve Stimson and bassist Steve Bingham, who continued to uphold their late leader’s legacy on 2012’s The Show Goes On, 2015’s On The Move and now this latest album, on which they’re joined by keyboard player Geraint Watkins, guitarist Billy Nicholls and drummer Brendan O’Neill. Amid rollicking new originals including Posslie Lane – in honour of Ronnie's former publican – sit affectionate renditions of Lane's Chicken Wired, live staple Spiritual Babe, Faces-days Debris, and the gorgeous Annie from 1977's Rough Mix project with Pete Townshend, whose Squeezebox also gets a revisit.

John Garcia & The Band Of Gold

John Garcia & The Band Of Gold

Sludge-filled sloppy seconds from former Kyuss frontman.

Riding his Kyuss legacy hard into the ground, John Garcia's latest outing (after a slew of promising solo work) sounds like desert rock's diminishing returns. Fitted, quite rightly, as the founder of the band who would most likely have been the 1970s Black Sabbath, he, along with Brant Bjork and Josh Homme (both doing sterling work elsewhere these days) brought contemporary stoner rock dancing out of the desert.

There's no denying the wonder at the heart of it all. For a band with such a legacy, the Kyuss albums, but their smoky magic is missing in this hard record, which sounds like an approximation of a band trying to capture those splashes of groove. Garcia's voice is still a rasping wonder, and bringing in Chris Goss to add lustre to what sounds like a collection of songs captured in a garage is inspired, but it's not enough to lift these thrashy, stuttering jams (and occasionally ludicrous lyrics), which sound like the work of a much younger man staring at the sun-bleached horizon and wondering what tomorrow might yet bring.

---

Various

3 x 4 SEP 10

The Bangles, The Three O'Clock, The Dream Syndicate and Rain Parade join forces.

The above four bands formed what was known as the Paisley Underground, a small but highly potent scene that originally grew up in Los Angeles at the dawn of the 1980s, held together by a love for the jangling guitars of The Byrds and the Velvet Underground, and (of course) for floral-paisley-shirts Sunshine pop, Nuggets and Pebbles garage rock. These were bands that didn't so much faithfully recreate the past as add another layer of interpretation to it.

The idea behind 3 x 4 - for each band to cover one song by each of the other three – came about at a benefit gig the four bands played at LA's Fonda Theatre to raise money for Education Through Music. They wanted to pay tribute to their Paisley roots, and this seemed like a great way to do it.

Rain Parade cover The Dream Syndicate's 'When You Smile' and put an acoustic bridge on the chorus; the mighty Bangles bring in Indian percussive for Rain Parade's 'Talking In My Sleep', and so forth. Of particular note is 'The Dream Syndicate's fiery interpretation of The Bangles' 'Hero Takes A Fall' - a splendid loving indulgence.

---

Within Temptation

Resist

Hitherto symphonic metallers discover that less can be more. Indeed, in comparison to peers, Nightwish, who are writing 24-minute epics about evolutionary biology, Within Temptation's recent albums have seen them reign in their symphonic metal tendencies. By now the Dutch titans know that hard-hitting atmosphere and going straight for the jugular can yield equally emphatic results, and on Resist, their seventh album, they sound tighter and more purposeful than ever. Sharon den Adel's vocals are flawlessly distinctive and carrying, huge, anthemic choruses on tracks like Endless War and Trophy Hunter. And while The Reckoning and Raise Your Banner eschew orchestral opulence for immediacy, both are reassuringly awash with dark energy. Resist is more an evolution than a revolution in the band's sound, which tightens up and augments everything that was great about 2014's Hydra. It's also their most assured and heavy album to date.

---

A Pale Horse Named Death

When The World Becomes Undone

Type O Negative alumni revive past glories. A Pale Horse Named Death have more right than most to fill the vast, Type O Negative-shaped hole left after the death of frontman Peter Steele in 2010. They feature not one but two former members of the goth-metal figureheads: original drummer Sal Abruscato (on vocals here) and his own replacement, Johnny Kelly.

The New York band's third album offers a reminder of what was and what could have been. They've nailed the funeral cortège-paced sludge that was the calling card of the dud's old band, even if the latter's tar-black humour and cathedral sound, which tightens up and augments everything that was great about 2014's Hydra. It's also their most assured and heavy album to date.

---

Lapis Lazuli

Brain

Precise cyclical figures, jazzy swing, dubby loping... it's an Ozzed tentacles kind of party, with King Crimson and Brand X gratuitating midway. It's got plenty of clever chops, but presented aridly and organically – as they state on track one.

---

Pavlov's Dog

Prodigal Dreamer

It's 43 years since Pampered Mental, and today there's less electric light in frontman David Sarmark's voice, which suits Prodigal Dreamer's hymnal style. Familiar motifs – Nibs Stelling's fluid violin and the theatricality of Sarmark in The Winds Wild Early – show the six-piece are wearing well, even if this soulful slice of folk-prog America might signal a winding down.

---

The Hare and Hoof

The Terror Of Melton

The Terror Of Melton is an atmospheric, symphonic free-to-download album based on The Great War with empathy and class, very much in line with Pink Floyd's Final Cut. There's real feeling here, especially on 'AV Suite. An inspired tribute.

---

Pallas

Courage And Other Songs

Many believe that prog has no soul or emotion. No one told Graeme Murray, who present this atmospheric, symphonic free-to-download album based on The Great War with empathy and class, very much in line with Pink Floyd's Final Cut. There's real feeling here, especially on 'AV Suite. An inspired tribute.
Subscribe from just £17.50*

PLUS

Get a free Slash Funko Pop! and Guns N’ Roses book!

Order hotline 0344 848 2852

Please quote jan19 when ordering by phone

Lines open Monday-Friday 8am to 7pm and Saturday 10am to 2pm (GMT)
Great reasons to subscribe

- Pay just £17.50 every 6 months
- Spread the cost with Direct Debit
- Never miss an issue
- Delivered direct to your door

Enjoy your favourite magazine anywhere, anytime!

- Upgrade to include digital for just an extra £2.50

SEE THE FULL RANGE AND ORDER ONLINE AT www.myfavouritemagazines.co.uk/clr/jan19

Call UK 0344 848 2852 or overseas +44(0) 344 848 2852 and quote jan19

*Terms and conditions: Savings calculated against the full RRP (single issue price x frequency). You can write to us or call us to cancel your subscription within 14 days of purchase. Gift is only available for new UK subscribers. Gift is subject to availability. Please allow up to 60 days for the delivery of your gift. In the event of stocks being exhausted we reserve the right to replace with items of similar value. Payment is non-refundable after the 14-day cancellation period unless exceptional circumstances apply. Your statutory rights are not affected. Prices correct at point of print and subject to change. Full details of the Direct Debit guarantee are available on request. For full Terms and conditions please visit: bit.ly/magtandc. Offer ends 28th February 2019.
Slipknot

All Hope Is Gone
10th Anniversary Edition ROADRUNNER

The masked maniacs’ difficult fourth album revisited. Maybe it’s not so ‘difficult’ after all?

You’ll never censor me, you’d better cherish me!” bellows Corey Taylor in Butcher’s Hook, neatly summing up a large part of Slipknot’s appeal midway through the band’s fourth studio album. All Hope Is Gone was always going to be a tough record for the Iowan nine-piece: the previous three had all been insanely successful, not least for a band that sounded permanently but thrillingly on the edge of disintegration. Upon its release, All Hope Is Gone went down just fine with hardcore fans but a consensus seems to have since developed that the last Slipknot album to feature once-talismanic drummer Joey Jordison is, on balance, their weakest.

In truth, this re-mastered, tenth anniversary edition confirms that the hardcore fans were right all along. Yes, All Hope Is Gone is a more fractured and restless affair than the fluid and fiery Vol.3, but its many peaks are among the finest songs that Slipknot have written. Radiant-friendly anthems like Snuff and the woozily melodic Dead Memories affirmed the band’s maturity as songwriters, but even more typical fare like Psychosocial and the Meshuggah-tinged Butcher’s Hook exhibited a collective desire to do something different with a proven formula. Sweet Christ, it’s ridiculously heavy, too: opener Gematria (The Killing Name) is a popping, hissing tsunami of churning death metal riffs, with Taylor in full bug-eyed mode; Vendetta sounds like Bay Area thrash fed through Al Jourgensen’s cosmic meat-grinder; This Cold Black is as unsettlingly bereft of light as its title suggests. Meanwhile, the blistering title track is one of Slipknot’s most underrated anthems, its bleak message – in hindsight – eerily prescient. And if anyone thought Slipknot were obsessed with court radio back in 2008, seven-minute sludge deluge Gehenna provides a noisy, grotesque and deeply discomfiting rebuttal. Newly paired with a hair-raising live show from Madison Square Gardens in 2009 (and let’s not forget how remarkable it is that a band that sounds like that can fill a venue that size in the first place) and with retooled, suitably retina-wrenching artwork courtesy of that terrifying Clown fella, All Hope Is Gone is absolutely run of the litter.

Dom Lawson

Saigon Kick

Reissues ROCK CANDY

Mad professors of psychedelic metal ride again.

Best remembered for their surprise MTV-bolstering hit Love Is On The Way, an Extreme-style ballad from second album The Lizard, in reality Florida’s Saigon Kick were experimenters extraordinaire, their eclectic Jane’s Addiction-meets-Alice In Chains via King’s X vibe demonstrating a restless appetite for exploration. Now with bonus tracks Hey Hey Hey and an acoustic Colors – far superior to the heavier version – their self-titled 1990 Atlantic debut (7/10) was a riot of off-the-wall ideas and a perfect springboard into their finest hour, 1992’s The Lizard (7/10), now augmented by a tidy cover of Dear Prudence), which went gold on the back of Love Is On The Way. Unfortunately success didn’t ensure stability and the creation of 1993’s even more fiercely experimental Water (7/10) was beset with infighting, guitarist Jason Bieler taking over vocals from departing Matt Kramer. Now including completely dispensable bonus track Not Enough, a load of industrial-style pissing about to Megadeth’s Symphony of Destruction riff, Water was Saigon Kick totally off the leash, Beatisy vocal harmonies and whimsical pop rubbing shoulders with tribal drums and axe-hero riffing. A joyous sonic adventure, it didn’t sell at all and Saigon Kick were dropped, basically for being far too clever for their own good.

Esi Berekian

Procol Harum

Reissues SRC VINYL

Two very different records from the 70s Procol catalogue.

Formed in 1967 from the ashes of Southend beat combo The Paramounts, Procol Harum laid out several of the ground rules for prog with A White Shade Of Pale – classical pretensions, opaque lyrics, a disregard for brevity – and immediately became an extraordinary band. Songs like Hommburg, Conquistador and A Salty Dog, when sung in Gary Brooker’s superb white soul, gave added meaning to Keith Reid’s melancholy lyrics. And the band’s combination of grandiosity and drama worked brilliantly when they were paired with an orchestra for Live in Concert With The Edmonton Symphony Orchestra (9/10); while others, most notably Deep Purple, had tried the same thing, the mixture of Proco’s doomed, cavernous songs and the power and darkness of the orchestra is one of the finest collaborations in rock.

Procol’s Ninth (6/10) is an entirely different kettle of kippers. Recorded very much as a reaction to 1973’s Grand Hotel, it deliberately moved itself far away from that album’s orante, and orchestral sound, and – as other, newer bands were doing at the time (i.e. 1975) – looked to an earlier time in rock’s history for inspiration. With the great R&B songwriters Jerry Leiber and Mike Stoller as producers, Procol’s Ninth was as much a Paramouts album as it was a Procol Harum one, even featuring covers of Eight Days A Week and the producers’ own Keep Forgetting. Elsewhere, the music was sparse, but heavy, and while classic songs were on the whole absent, it was a worthwhile diversion.

David Quantick

Angels & Airwaves

Reissues SRC VINYL

Grown-up vinyl reissues from Blink-182 spin-off band.

Even pop-punk frat boys can be struck down by a severe case of The Seriousness. For Blink-182’s Tom DeLonge that point came in the mid-00s, when he opted to ditch the band he co-founded and their fart’n’boob fixation, and reposition himself as the emo Bono. In fairness, he came close to – ahem – pulling it off on We Don’t Need To Whisper (7/10), the debut album from his new group, Angels & Airwaves. The circling guitars of The Adventure and It Hurts spiral upwards, U2 style, though the ever-present Hanna-Barbera twang in DeLonge’s voice undercut the heart-on-sleeve emoting. Still, it was unexpectedly affecting. The shock of the new had by far the follow-up, 2007’s brighter J-Empire (6/10), further undercut by DeLonge broadening his palette and losing the focus that had initially fuelled him. It wasn’t bad, but it
I t was an extraordinary song that lifted a previously little known Swedish rock band to the dizzying heights of global stardom in 1986. The Out Of This World titled hit was an illustrative career. Marcello, formerly of glam-rockers Easy Action, fitting in seamlessly, Norum wasn’t missed. And the strength of this album, full of high-class heavy rock, made nonsense of Norum’s parting shot. Superstitious, the opening track and lead single, rocked in the grand manner of vintage Deep Purple, with parping keyboards adding a little echo of ELP’s Fanfare For The Common Man and the pop bouncy of Van Halen’s Jump.

The Final Countdown powered to No.1 in twenty-five countries, and from the album of the same name there were two other big hits – the anthem Rock The Night and power ballad Carrie. But with success came trouble. By the end of ’86, guitarist and founding member John Norum had quit, grumbling that Europe had become “a teeny-bopper bubblegum band”.

The Final Countdown was a hard act to follow. Harder still with Norum gone. And yet from a period of turmoil and huge pressure the band emerged in 1988 with a brilliant album, boldly titled Out Of This World. With new guitarist Kee could have been one of a hundred bands around at the same time.

A decade-plus later, both albums are getting a lavish vinyl reissue: lacquered, multi-colour discs (black and purple for the debut, shades of gold for the follow-up) and various expensive-feeling inserts accompanying both. It’s a properly adult experience, though not the kind you’d expect from a bloke who used to be in Blink-182.

Dave Everley

Man

Evolution (PUPPY PYRAMID)
Pride Of Man (in a nice six-CD boxset).

Witnessing Man as they found their feet after psychedelic birth-pangs in 1968 felt like the nearest this country had to the fabled jam bands playing California’s ballrooms. Led by Micky Jones’ liquid guitar flights and brilliant drummer Terry Williams, their freewheeling era.

Almost defined the whole Christmas At The Patti drummer Terry Williams, their liquid guitar flights and brilliant ballrooms. Led by Micky Jones’ 1968 felt like the nearest this six-CD boxset).

Pride of Man (in a nice

Dave Everley

European

Out Of This World (ROCK CANDY)

After the mega-hit, a hard-won victory.

The title track (by Jay McShann and Walter Brown) was featured on the Stones’ 1964 EP Five By Five recorded at Chess Studios on their first American trip, and the collection opens with the Muddy Waters song that inspired their name. The originals of the songs that peppered the first two Stones albums are here – including Bo Diddley’s Mono, Slim Harpo’s ‘I’m A King Bee and Dale Hawkins’ Susie Q; revealing just how faithfully they covered them, right down to the vocal asides and note-for-note guitar solos.

They’ve also rounded up the original version of every track on the Blue And Lonesome album – on which the Stones brought their own brand of authenticity to bear on four Little Walter songs, a couple by Howlin’ Wolf and varied gems from Lightnin’ Slim, Little Johnny Taylor and Magic Sam, among others.

Ronnie Wood has chipped in with the cover and the Willie Dixon Blues Heaven Foundation will get a cut from every copy sold. So ker-ching to them.

Hugh Fielder

Stereolab

Reissues: TOO FINE/PREGGAS ARE IN

Wormhole pop records reissued just as the world catches up.

In the early 90s, when electro music was all about starting futuristic rave fires, Stereolab dared to dream in oscillations. Inspired by the surreal and situationist culture and disguising a political passion beneath their boffin deadpan, Laetitia Sadier and Tim Gane defied the techno revolution to hark backwards to krautrock and its lab-coated origins, draping Gallic 60s pop melodies over the sort of synth drones that people with clipboards used to get out of computers the size of buses in 1962. The result is arguably the first convincing example of electronic retro-futurism, and the true root of modern laptop-tronica. Reissuing 1992’s debut album Peng! (9/10) exposes inder origins than you might expect. This enthralling art-pop record is a Radiophonic twist on the drone rock of The Velvet Underground, Spacemen 3 and early Spiritualized, the warped screams of My Bloody Valentine and the C86 jangles of The Wedding Present. Buried beneath K-Stors and Surrealchemist, though, is electronic’s future; the glitchy clicks and buzzes that are as ubiquitous in leftfield pop today as facial tattoos.

The 1993 mini-LP Space Age Bachelor Pad Music (8/10) focussed the aesthetic further, creating a cult sensation with its harmony-drenched clash of hypnotic sci-fi easy listening, android rock’n’roll and crank tonal experiments. Radiohead probably got a copy stuck in the tour bus’s CD player; whatever its time is, it still sounds ahead of its time.

Mark Beaumont

Various

Confusion ‘The Blues’Unavailable

Rolling Stones turn blue. Having fortuitously recovered their blues mojo on their latest album, after finding that the prospect of recording anything else was beyond them, The Rolling Stones have now put their name to a blues compilation of the songs that have topped and tailed their illustrious career.

Paul Elliott

reviews

CLASSICROCKMAGAZINE.COM 95
Iron Maiden
Reissues PARLOPHONE
First four albums from heavy metal juggernaut.
For all punk's much-vaunted uncompromising stance, when Iron Maiden took to the Top Of The Pops stage in February 1980 to promote their debut single Running Free they were, at their own insistence, the first band to play live on the show since The Who in '73.
For Maiden, actions have always spoken louder than swaggering PR hyperbole. Although never en vogue, the Irons' ingenuous passion's always been in fashion, and as a consequence time has seen them emerge - first domestically, then universally - as the people's rock band of choice.
These largely frill-free digipack CD reissues (the first quartet of four, in a series that over the next six months will ultimately constitute their entire 16-album back catalogue - as remastered for iTunes in 2015) cover their rough, raw ready Di'Anno-fronted emergence - Iron Maiden, Killers (both 7/10) - and the explosive and defining halcyon days of Dickinson: The Number Of The Beast (complete with Eddie The Ed figurine and Devil patch; 9/10) and Piece Of Mind (8/10). Functional, honest, designed for excellent performance at maximum volume, they're very metal and very, very Maiden.
Ian Fortnam

Buzzcocks
Reissues DOMINO

They were among the first wave of punk bands, but there was more to Buzzcocks than just boredom and power chords. Following the departure of frontman Howard Devoto after just a few months to form Magazine, the most sardonic band of all time, Pete Shelley brought to Buzzcocks a style of songwriting that was both aggressive and wistful. With Steve Diggle providing a boxer's attitude to the guitar, Buzzcocks became punk's most realist band, writing songs about love and disappointment, identity and romance, instead of pretending to care about the government.

Their debut album, Another Music In A Different Kitchen (10/10), is one of the great mission statements. The sleeve looks like the contents - metallic silver with orange flashes - and the contents sound like nothing else; songs that race past in a blur not matched until Husker Du got going, riffs that reference both T.Rex and the Stooges, motoric beats, and the most amazing melodies. Produced by Martin Rushent to sound both speedy and shiny, Another Music still sounds brilliant, from the opening snatch of an upgraded With Someone You Shouldn't Have, their biggest hit, is one of the greatest songs of all time, with guitars showing each other forward and Shelley's most defining and anthemic chorus. It's survived cover versions and adverts and it's still wonderful.

It's also just one of the excellent parts of the curate's egg that is Love Bites (8/10), an album that still feels like a grab-bag of instrumentals, hastily written songs and the odd classic. Love Bites is Buzzcocks's big pop album, put together at the height of their near-fame, and it shows. The best songs are as good as anything the band recorded: Nostalgia (recorded by Penetration, trivia fans), Sixteen Again and the concert closer E.S.P. And while some, like Just Lust (a B-side on an album? Punk heroey) and Operator's Manual are merely good, the oddities, such as Diggle's Love Is Lies and the band-written instrumental Late For The Train, have worn well.

After Buzzcocks' second album the cracks began to show, in singles like the superbly cynical Everybody's Happy. Nowadays, there was a brilliant third album that deserved to sell millions but didn't, and the band's first era ended with a stubby, acid-fuelled singles trilogy. But these albums, still excellent, still influential and still entertaining, are essential.

David Quantick

Stillwater
Reissues CHERRY RED

Southern rockers' first two.

The original Stillwater (not the one in the film Almost Famous) came from Macon, Georgia and made only a brief mark on '70s southern rock over two albums, but these remastered versions show they deserved more.

Their best-known moment is the US Top-50 single Mind Bender, a slow, bluesy tale of finding a talking guitar in a junk shop, from their self-titled 1977 debut (8/10). Even their use of a Frampton-style talk box still sounds like a neat trick, even when half of all chart music in the current era seems to use the increasingly insufferable effect.

Elsewhere, they showcase impressive versatility: the defiant boogie anthem Rock 'n' Roll Lazer is punchier in this remastered version, and if they don't achieve the heaviness of some of their southern contemporaries, this was always a band who were as much about the roll as the rock. Two versions (one live) of the Santana-ish Out On A Limb exemplifies that, along with some dazzling three-guitar- and-keyboard excursions.

Ill-fated second album I Reserve The Right (6/10) suffers from a few too many AOR tendencies, but closer Ain't We A Parrights their fire, with Bonnie Bramlett lending a vocal counterpart.

Johnny Sharp

Tygers Of Pan Tang

Hellbound Spellbound '81

NWOBBHM heroes live at their early peak.

There was a touch of glamour about the young Tygers Of Pan Tang - in that wonderfully exotic name, lifted from one of Michael
The Fallen Leaves
Punk Rock For Gentlemen
PARLIAMENT

No one would accuse the Fallen Leaves of blazing a futuristic 21st-century trail for rock, but if traditionalism is a virtue then they are the epitome of it. There’s a neat, natty, just-so-ness about this collection, recorded on vintage equipment for further authentic effect. Songs like Go Now and Sylvie Sors are more than mere copyism of 60s originals. Rather, they are the work of master rock tailors, expertly cut, with the reliable smartness of a proper Harrington jacket; no knock-off here. When they do a keyboard solo it’s not with a garish flourish, but a single-note affair. Co-songwriters Rob Green and former Subway Sect man Rob Symons draw on decades of expertise, opting for a combination of energy and elegance in the main, as befits the album title. It isn’t possible to magic back the likes of The Kinks or The Pretty Things, but the very next best thing to that is to catch The Fallen Leaves in some small, intimate club and watch them up-close, making a perfect 1964 of things, with redolences of Danzigettes and suede boots and a rare, classic precision.

David Stubbs

Family
Family At The BBC MAGNET

Patchy, not-so-live live tracks. The 95 tracks on this seven-CD box set were recorded for/by the BBC between ’67 and ’73 for various programs including Colour Me Pop and John Peel’s Top Gear. Among them are 20 previously unreleased, some real gems, lots of workmanlike and the odd real stinker. Arranged chronologically, with several versions of some songs, they tell the story of a great, trailblazing British progressive band of the late 60s morphing into OK rock also-rans. For many fans much of the gold here will be the earlier recordings, of songs (See Through Windows, Peace Of Mind, Drowned In Wine) from their stand-out first three albums, and a couple (Between Blue And Me, Spanish Tide) from the return-to-form Fearless. Mind you, many of the tracks are far from live, with swathes of tracking from the albums versions – some are the album version. But then that kind of shenanigans was the norm for Beeb sessions. Other tracks clearly don’t employ that approach, such as the May ’69 version of The Weaver’s Answer, in which Charlie Whitney’s guitar solo sounds like he’s playing a different song. Also included is a nine-track DVD of Whistle Test, Top Of The Pops and other TV appearances, a hardback book with an essay, rare photos, poster, recording and broadcast dates and personnel (Roger Chapman on sax throughout? I don’t think so).

Paul Henderson

Ian Dury & The Blockheads

The Stiff Recordings 1977-1980 DEMON

Four-LP vinyl box set covers Lord Upminster’s Stiff Recordings era.

Stumbling obliviously into a dual role which seemed as tailor-made as it was unlikely, Ian Dury – a unifying, unavoidable presence between the summers of ’77 and ’79 – was UK punk’s elder statesman-cum-poet laureate. Yet this silver-tongued bus driver’s son suffered a fall that was just as spectacular, sudden and unexplained as his phenomenal rise. Incredibly, it all occurred on the back of three singles and a single album, on a singular label, Dave Robinson and Jake Riviera’s Stiff. Dury had been kicking around as the frontman of pub-rock oddities Kilburn And The High Roads since ’71, but upon going solo he engaged the original Pink Floyd management team, formed a songwriting partnership with guitarist Chas Jankel (with whom he formed The Blockheads), and by blending music-hall with rock, reggae and a colourful vocabulary he clumsily, but effectively, seduced a nation via a never more lively gig scene.

Dury’s ascent was dizzying, from pot-boiling 1976’s debut single Sex & Drugs & Rock & Roll, through 1977’s faultless, genre-blending Top-Five New Boots & Panties!!! album, a veritable feast of delights featuring the barroom couplets of Billericay Dickie (who had a love affair with Nina who’d ’never been more obscurer’) alongside Wake Up And Make Love With Me (a sensitive examination of having a ‘proper wriggle in the naughty naked nude’), to Hit Me With Your Rhythm Stick topping the chart in January ’79 and Reasons To Be Cheerful, Part 3 hitting No.3 the following July. Then? The decline. Do It Yourself had the previous two singles going for it, but not a whole lot else. Laughter followed, but not all the way to the bank. After the critically mauled album stilled at No.48, Stiff – and The Blockheads – limped away. All The Stiff stuff’s here (plus a fourth disc of priceless single As and Bs, not least, S&D&R&R’s magnificent Razzle In My Pocket flip), all sounding perfectly pukka, all nicely translucent vinyl-ed. While Ian Dury’s bankable days were brief, his status as a national treasure remains enduring and richly deserved.

Ian Fortnam
Kscope
The post-progressive label have been putting out quality records for 10 years now, but which are the best that should you own?

The roots of this leading-light label in contemporary progressive music actually go back to the late 90s. Part of Snapper Music, and sister-label to the more metal-geared Peaceville, Kscope was initially the sole preserve of Steven Wilson and his much-loved brainchild Porcupine Tree. Back then, in 1999, the idea was to have an arm of the Snapper group that focused on the kind of 21st-century prog and alt.rock advocated by Wilson. It quickly became apparent that there were others like him. Fellow innovative British rock bands The Pineapple Thief and Anathema quickly joined the label, followed by others from an increasingly broad range of countries and schools of progressive thought.

To that end, Kscope’s catalogue now covers rock, electronica, alternative jazz, metal and folk, along with solo albums and reissues from A-listers including Ian Anderson and Steve Hogarth (we’ve deliberately left those out of this round-up, as they really merit guides of their own). It has essentially created a whole genre; so many more artists have emerged under the ‘post-progressive’ banner since its inception. And with our sister title Prog playing a big part in its ongoing development, it’s become a revered haven for quality progressive music – proof, for those who need it, that prog is much more than something weird that happened in Canterbury in the late 60s and early 70s.

It’s not all gold, though. Kscope can feel like a very niched, slightly chin-strokey environment, especially at the more electronic end of their roster, and some records simply err on the drifty, opaque side, irrespective of your personal taste. But the label is also home to a rich lineage of boundary-pushing rock; the sort of albums that subvert clichés in the most inviting way possible. If you’re bored by a lot of contemporary rock, and long for something new that’s both interesting and readily likeable, this is a good place to turn to.

A couple of notes: yes, Steven Wilson is all over this guide, essentially because he’s been very busy and played with a number of prime-cut artists signed to the label. Besides, he’s basically the reason the label exists, so it seems fair enough. Beyond that, we’ve capped it at one album per artist, and made our choices with the rock listener in mind.

Polly Glass

Anathema
The Optimist 2017
Anathema’s back catalogue is filled with highly original progressive music (once you get past their early doom days, that is), so the fact that this tops it all is saying something. With their eleventh album they expertly shaped years of innovation, experimentation, songwriting and emotional upheaval into 11 exquisite tracks. Using a central character (The Optimist) provided Danny and Vincent Cavanagh with a new output through which to channel their own experience (stemming from a tough upbringing in Liverpool), combined with a slick, effortless mix of organic and electronic elements and, crucially, amazing tunes.

Essential Classics

Steven Wilson
The Raven That Refused To Sing (And Other Stories) 2013
A conceptual love letter to the founding fathers of prog (lyrically inspired by ghost stories by the likes of Edgar Allan Poe), this was Steven Wilson’s first record as an all-out composer, and saw him writing specifically for his newly assembled virtuoso band. A flowing set of immaculately composed vignettes, it’s thematically compelling and musically stunning throughout, with the edgy dynamism of Luminol, the gut-wrenching Drive Home and the dark and twisting The Watchmaker. It’s one of the strongest records he’s done, and features his best vocal performance to date in the hauntingly beautiful title track.

The post-progressive label have been putting out quality records for 10 years now, but which are the best that should you own?

The roots of this leading-light label in contemporary progressive music actually go back to the late 90s. Part of Snapper Music, and sister-label to the more metal-geared Peaceville, Kscope was initially the sole preserve of Steven Wilson and his much-loved brainchild Porcupine Tree. Back then, in 1999, the idea was to have an arm of the Snapper group that focused on the kind of 21st-century prog and alt.rock advocated by Wilson. It quickly became apparent that there were others like him. Fellow innovative British rock bands The Pineapple Thief and Anathema quickly joined the label, followed by others from an increasingly broad range of countries and schools of progressive thought.

To that end, Kscope’s catalogue now covers rock, electronica, alternative jazz, metal and folk, along with solo albums and reissues from A-listers including Ian Anderson and Steve Hogarth (we’ve deliberately left those out of this round-up, as they really merit guides of their own). It has essentially created a whole genre; so many more artists have emerged under the ‘post-progressive’ banner since its inception. And with our sister title Prog playing a big part in its ongoing development, it’s become a revered haven for quality progressive music – proof, for those who need it, that prog is much more than something weird that happened in Canterbury in the late 60s and early 70s.

It’s not all gold, though. Kscope can feel like a very niched, slightly chin-strokey environment, especially at the more electronic end of their roster, and some records simply err on the drifty, opaque side, irrespective of your personal taste. But the label is also home to a rich lineage of boundary-pushing rock; the sort of albums that subvert clichés in the most inviting way possible. If you’re bored by a lot of contemporary rock, and long for something new that’s both interesting and readily likeable, this is a good place to turn to.

A couple of notes: yes, Steven Wilson is all over this guide, essentially because he’s been very busy and played with a number of prime-cut artists signed to the label. Besides, he’s basically the reason the label exists, so it seems fair enough. Beyond that, we’ve capped it at one album per artist, and made our choices with the rock listener in mind.

Polly Glass
The Pineapple Thief

Dissolution 2018

Another career-topping latest album, this time from Bruce Soord’s branchial. Beesfed up in terms of weight and virtuosis accomplished by a new drummer Gavin Harrison, Dissolution brings together classic-Floyd-era prog rock, 80s/90s grunge, Radiohead and other influences that have shaped Soord over the years. It’s the band’s most impactful combination of texture, gnarly progressive oomph and strong tunes yet, peaking on the likes of Try As I Might and For Below. TPT never quite hit the heights of some of the other artists on the label, but this album puts them comfortably in the big league.

North Atlantic Oscillation

The Third Day 2014

If you buy one predominantly electronic record from the Kscope catalogue (and they have serious form in this field), make it this one. Look up the term ‘sorcery’ in the dictionary, and this album will be one of the first things you find. Mixing shoegaze, infectious pop tunes and ambient layers, songs swell through different moods with ease. One to order on vinyl, for the cool artwork and the immersive blend of velvety warmth and crisp electronica. The Third Day is a beautiful, original record, by perhaps the most soulful band to be named after a weather phenomenon.

Steven Wilson

Grace For Drowning 2013

Often over shadowed in Wilson’s catalogue by the iconic likes of The Raven, his second solo album is actually stuffed full of resounding winners. All that gnarly jazz, prog and industrial noise he’d been quietly absorbing for years is stirred into the compelling, cohesive frameworks of Index, Rader II, Remainder The Black Dog and more. And while his latest solo record To The Bone might have been said to be his most poppy venture, it’s on Grace For Drowning, in the exquisitely melodic heartbreak of Defrom To Form A Star and Postcard, that we see the seeds of Wilson’s pop prowess really start to flourish.

Gazpacho

Tick Tock 2020

Weird shit be happening in proggiest Norway, but in the hands of Gazpacho (so-called because it’s “the bastard of soups”, apparently) it’s melodious weird shit. There’s a sparkling sense of macabre storytelling in records like this. A concept album based on the book Wind, Sand And Stars by Antoine Di Saint-Exupery, Tick Tock is an enigmatic hybrid of gnarly rock, alternative indie and avant pop. It’s predecessor Night was a bit more immediate, but this is still very more-ish, and the depth and intrigue makes it the more rewarding listen. Check out Desert Flight and the title track (part 1) for starters.

Iamthemorning

Ocean Sounds 2016

Comprising songs from their three Kscope albums, and accompanied by a studio film shot in a remote spot in Norway, Ocean Sounds is the perfect introduction to this slightly strange but commanding Russian duo. Singer Marjana Semkina brings to mind Kate Bush at her most other-worldly, while virtuoso pianist Gleb Kolyadin stirs classical dexterity into lush soundscapes. Joined on the record by the live band that has served them so well over the past year or two, they show off these songs to their best advantage. Highlights include the delicate, brooding Inside and Touching II and the swelling chamber prog of Libretto Horror.

Porcupine Tree

Lightbulb Sun 2020

Yes, it pre-dates Kscope’s official launch, but it’s the first record released on a KScope imprint so we figured it was okay to include it. Knowing what epic tours de force Steven Wilson went on to create (both with Porcupine Tree and as a solo artist) gives Lightbulb Sun an endeavor naively, lyrically and musically. There’s an experimental spirit here, combined with a prevailing focus on solid tunes and guitar hooks, that set the tone for subsequent KScope records. Wilson has since become a better singer, guitarist and storyteller, but with this record’s mesh of melodic angst, atmospheric swathes and gittery rock jabs, that scarcely matters.

Blackfield

Blackfield 2016

Another early Kscope release (and later reissued by the label in deluxe form), this time from the musical lovechild of Steven Wilson and Israeli star Aviv Geffen. This, Blackfield’s intriguing debut album, is still their best, we think. It begins with prettily fragile acoustic guitars that smash suddenly into a moody, heavy guitar stomp (Open Mind), before traversing elegantly through alt-pop catchiness (e.g. the title track), melancholy synth (Glow) and marriages of Geffen and Wilson’s imperfect, heartfelt vocals. The sound of two innovative but tune-focused composer minds flexing their creative muscles in harmony.

No-Sound

The Northern Religion Of Things 2013

Not so much ‘Avoid’ as ‘Me’ or ‘Maybe don’t bother’ (especially when from a label that has so much else to offer), this live album from ambient Italian experimentalists No-Sound is one of several KScope records that feels a little nebulous and (whisper it) a bit boring. Naturally if you’re a No-Sound fan you’ll most likely disagree with that, but for our money this album seems rather innocuous; sliding lethargically through layers of alt-electronic and sleep-inducing resonations. It might be fine if you’re trying to sleep, but there are more compelling examples in this field to be had elsewhere.
Nightwish

End Of An Era NUCLEAR BLAST

An historic performance from the Finns.

When you watch this magical show from October 21, 2005, it’s hard to believe that a day later the band fired vocalist Tarja Turunen. Because what Nightwish have here is peerless. Whatever they’ve subsequently achieved, which has been considerable, watching the band here on stage in Helsinki reminds you that there was something untouchable about them with their original vocalist.

The performance offers stunning symphonic rock, and a reminder of the way in which the musicianship is intricately interwoven with the vocals – Tarja sweeping majestically through the mix.

Available in various formats, there’s also a bonus documentary called A Day Before Tomorrow on DVD and Blu-ray versions, guiding us through the fifteen days leading up to this concert. You can tell relations between band and singer are strained, even if most of the dialogue is in Finnish.

An apt reminder of past glories.

Malcolm Dome

---

Black Sabbath

Going Through Changes SPV

A photographic run through the 70s.

There have been so many books on Sabbath that it’s hard to think any new one can have much to offer. But this is at least a little different. It doesn’t pretend to be comprehensive, controversial or analytical. What you get here are a selection of photos from the golden era of the band, both onstage and off. And the book is far from a one-man job, with Lee’s idiosyncratic, yet witty and self-effacing prose that really drives the project. Structurally, Lee dedicates a chronological (Lee’s use of that, is, not instrument date) examination of the basses used on stage and recording with the band, replete with signature models, annotated set lists, and the ever-near presence of Lee’s long-time bass tech and collection curator John ‘Skully’ McIntosh.

There’s a lot to absorb, and the job of trying to insert the predilections of a self-confessed bass nerd into a wider cultural context – while retaining interest for the less-zealous music fan – is a tricky one. Lee’s solution is to intersperse the tech-speak with a succession of entertaining interviews with major proponents of the instrument; John Paul Jones, Robert Trujillo, Les Claypool and Jeff Tweedy, among others. The best of these is a revealing and endearing chat with Bob Daisley and his love (shared by Lee) of Tony Zemaitis’s hand-engraved, metal-topped works of art, of which a photo of Lee’s own graces the book’s cover.

It’s not entirely faultless. No one’s going to sit down and read it from cover to cover, and the sheer magnitude of it feels intimidating at times. However, between Lee’s infectious devotion and handsome production values, it can claim ownership of its title with little complaint.

Tim Batcup

---

Smash! Green Day, The Offspring, NOFX & The 90s Punk Explosion

By the late 80s, punk was deader than disco in the US, mostly restricted to the Gilman, a tiny Bay Area club which banned drink, drugs and dogs. The journey from underground to globe-conquering mainstream was a classic case of the right people – from Bad Religion’s heroin-loving Brett Gurewitz, a businesswoman as much as a punk, to Green Day’s fiercely ambitious Billie Joe Armstrong – and the right music, which got better as it became more popular.

With the distance that being British brings, but no shortage of access, Ian Winwood is a sharp-eyed guide to a well-earned package of packed with curve balls, cameos (did Farrah Fawcett-Majors really leave California to pursue Captain Sensible?), betrayals and friendships.

Having explained the explosion brilliantly, Winwood halts the saga at American Idiot, wholly omitting the causes of Armstrong’s future meltdown; not to mention NOFX’s post-Vegas-shooting idiocy. The Offspring’s studio paralysis and Bad Religion’s re-birth. Volume 2, perhaps?

John Aitwood

---

Five Years Ahead Of My Time: Garage Rock From The 50s To The Present

Seth Bovey

Fine and thorough account of the ever-reviving garage genre.

It’s forgotten now but by 1958, rock’n’roll was considered to be finished, with Little Richard giving up music to enter the ministry and Elvis joining the army. What commentators didn’t reckon with was a vast explosion of young, amateur, makeshift groups across America who would keep the genre alive, buying up instruments in large numbers and dreaming rock’n’roll dreams of their own. When The Beatles conquered America, the same happened.
again, this time worldwide – one of the many fascinating details of Bovey’s account is a Uruguayan beat group called Los Mockers, imitation Mop tops who took a small portion of South America by storm. After punk, garage entered a postmodern phrase with the brilliant B-52s and Cramps referencing its origins.

Bovey is an academic, but this book is light on theory and copious in historical detail and explanation of the development of a movement that has survived on sheer unquenchable fuzz-tone enthusiasm.

David Stubb

Lawnmower Deth

Unleashed In The East…

Midlands! WAP MONEY

The steepest band in the world, on DVD/CD.

Live and sheep dipping from the 2018 Download Festival, the British thrash metal bozo clowns reunion sounds like a whole lot of fun in a Hell's Angels meeting your grandma for tea and scones type of way. Sure, they have the chops (probably the pork ones at the meat raffle in your local pub) but they also have enough saving graces to power this juggernaut of absurdity down the Moto Donington Services. Icky Ficky is plainly vile, as is Egg Sandwich, but the ‘classic’ may be Watch Out Grandma. Here Comes A Lawnmower, which essentially does for metal what the Wurzels did for cider rock.

Once heard then best soon forgotten, Jagged Wedge takes speaking in drunken tongues to the nth degree, but Urban Surfer 125 is charming: exactly the kind of tune you’d require to rearrange the furniture in a motorway café. A foolish album, but with certain delicately grossy notes.

Max Bell

Fleetwood Mac FAQ

Ryan Reed

Studious but self-aware tome on fifty years of Mac.

Subtitled All That's Left To Know About The Iconic Rock Survivors, this facts-and-fun book for fans of the critically indulged, cocaine-added soft-rockers shrewdly taps into their most interesting feature: their bokers saga of bust-ups and back-stories.

It shapes the tale in five phases: the Peter Green era, the transitional era, the Buckingham-Nicks era, the post-classic era and the modern era. While that suggests gravitas on a par with a deconstruction of pointillism, Reed realises how funny the offstage calamities of this band – or, really, series of bands – have been. The recent binning of Lindsay Buckingham appears to have occurred just before publication, but by then there have been enough angst-hilarity crossover episodes to fill twenty books, from “the LSD-fuelled Munich commune incident” to analysis of the Mac’s chronically bad cover art.

There are top-10 lists aplenty and interviews with fringe members, producers and crew. A well-gauged blend of research and irreverence.

Chris Roberts

Welcome To My Nightmare: Fifty Years Of Alice Cooper

Martin Popoff

Large-format coffee-table chronology from prolific writer.

It’s never a good sign when a book loses you in its author’s introduction, but Welcome To My Nightmare manages with room to spare. To an Alice Cooper fan, the words “The classic Alice albums from Love It To Death through Muscle Of Love generally sound like crap” is nothing other than fighting talk. Frankly, if that’s the way you feel, write a book about someone else.

But of course, Martin Popoff already has. Before ‘celebrating’ Alice in print, he’s written books about Rush, Queen, Ramones, Rainbow, Dio, Floyd, Sabbath, Maiden, Purple, BOC, The Clash, etc and enough bulky, subjective metal guides to choke a horse. Anyway, the Cooper story’s told in chronological order, with quotes from Alice, his bandmates and associates, but that’s told by a writer who thinks Killer, School’s Out and Billion Dollar Babies “generally sound like crap” makes it very hard for any Cooper connoisseur to take it entirely seriously.

Ian Fortnam
For the stories behind the best albums and the bands that produced them… has it covered.

Order your copy at www.myfavouritemagazines.co.uk/PROG.

NEW ISSUE ON SALE NOW
Def Leppard
Did Hysteria cause hysteria at London’s O2?
Following the sudden departures of guitarists Andreas Eriksson and Drew Lowe and bassist Colin Parkinson, and with the imminent release of the band’s third album, Ride To Nowhere, frontman Nathan James explains where the UK hard rockers Inglorious go from here.

Paraphrasing Oscar Wilde, to lose one band member might be considered a misfortune, to lose two careless, but to part with three? It was a hell of a day. I saw it coming. But what it made myself and Phil [Beaver, drums] realise is that this is for life. If you’re not born to be in a band and to be a friggin’ rock star then it cannot be taught.

With a third album about to be released and the band about to begin a massive tour, the timing couldn’t have been any worse.

No. The experience was tough and it left me quite angry. But we didn’t get on. I want to be happy on tour. I want to walk out on stage at Shepherd’s Bush Empire with a group that has the same goals, dreams and focus as I do. And if those guys don’t feel that way then they don’t deserve to be there.

What can you tell us about the revised line-up?

Every guitar owner and his cat, including some established artists, wanted to join. The new band will be announced on the release of the album [on January 25 via Frontiers].

Although the former members played on the new record, you wrote all of the melodies, lyrics and one fifth of the music?

Yeah. So to all those people on Facebook who said things are going to change, that it’ll be a completely different band, that’s rubbish. I’m still here. It all goes back to being happy, and this album was quite hard for me to write. I lost a lot of people along the way, including my grandfather and one of my best friends. It has some very personal songs, like Never Alone. That’s about a lady called Tina who looked after me when I was young and went off the rails. I cried as I recorded it.

Will another of its best songs, I Don’t Know You, appear in the live set?

Yes, absolutely. Further down the line it’s also going to be a single.

Last year Inglorious toured with spoof hair-metallers Steel Panther. Was that as much fun as it sounds on paper?

Yeah. It was our second tour with Steel Panther, and this time a lot of people in the crowd were there for Inglorious. It was really cool to walk on stage at Hammy O and have five thousand people cheer.

You’ve already mentioned Shepherd’s Bush Empire. On this tour you’ll be playing by far the biggest venues Inglorious have headlined. Are you at all nervous?

Not at all. After you’ve exposed your soul on live reality TV and been judged by the nation [James appeared on The Voice in 2012 and reached the quarter-finals of Andrew Lloyd Webber’s Superstar] you grow a very thick skin.

That’s good, because to some you’re seen as an egomaniac. Back in 2017 you boasted that rock music “needed” a band like Inglorious. Seeing those comments in print, how did you feel?

I felt they were completely fair. Look, I’ve worked my bollocks off for my entire life. You don’t just wake up and sing like I do, it doesn’t just happen. I fully deserve to be where I am and I believe very sincerely that Inglorious should be celebrated.

It sounds like you’re enjoying proving a few people wrong.

Yeah, I am. In the UK we are the only band doing this at our level, so you can either get behind us and support something that’s young and British and good and exciting, or you can sit and moan about the fact that I started out on a reality TV show.

The tour begins on January 28.

---

Inglorious

The new-generation classic rockers are back with a revised line-up and new music.

---

Inglorious formed in February 2014. They are supported on these upcoming dates by City Of Thieves. James appeared in the 2018 touring version of Jeff Wayne’s War Of The Worlds.

Inglorious embarked on a UK tour in January 2018 with Steel Panther as support. They also played three shows in December 2017 in support of Steel Panther in the Netherlands.

Inglorious are a British classic rock band formed in 2014. They have released three albums, with their third album, Ride To Nowhere, due for release on January 25, 2018.

The band are best known for their live shows, which have been described as “energetic” and “highly entertaining.” They have received positive reviews for their performances, including “ aclap from the audience” at a recent concert.

Inglorious are currently touring the UK in support of their third album, with support from Steel Panther. The band are also due to perform at a number of festivals in the coming months.

---

FOLLOWING THE Sudden DEPARTURES OF GUITARISTS ANDREAS ERIKSSON AND DREW LOWE AND BASSIST COLIN PARKINSON, AND WITH THE IMMINENT RELEASE OF THE BAND’S THIRD ALBUM, RIDE TO NOWHERE, FRONTMAN NATHAN JAMES EXPLAINS WHERE THE UK HARD ROCKERS INGLORIOUS GO FROM HERE.

Paraphrasing Oscar Wilde, to lose one band member might be considered a misfortune, to lose two careless, but to part with three? It was a hell of a day. I saw it coming. But what it made myself and Phil [Beaver, drums] realise is that this is for life. If you’re not born to be in a band and to be a friggin’ rock star then it cannot be taught.

With a third album about to be released and the band about to begin a massive tour, the timing couldn’t have been any worse.

No. The experience was tough and it left me quite angry. But we didn’t get on. I want to be happy on tour. I want to walk out on stage at Shepherd’s Bush Empire with a group that has the same goals, dreams and focus as I do. And if those guys don’t feel that way then they don’t deserve to be there.

What can you tell us about the revised line-up?

Every guitar owner and his cat, including some established artists, wanted to join. The new band will be announced on the release of the album [on January 25 via Frontiers].

Although the former members played on the new record, you wrote all of the melodies, lyrics and one fifth of the music?

Yeah. So to all those people on Facebook who said things are going to change, that it’ll be a completely different band, that’s rubbish. I’m still here. It all goes back to being happy, and this album was quite hard for me to write. I lost a lot of people along the way, including my grandfather and one of my best friends. It has some very personal songs, like Never Alone. That’s about a lady called Tina who looked after me when I was young and went off the rails. I cried as I recorded it.

Will another of its best songs, I Don’t Know You, appear in the live set?

Yes, absolutely. Further down the line it’s also going to be a single.

Last year Inglorious toured with spoof hair-metallers Steel Panther. Was that as much fun as it sounds on paper?

Yeah. It was our second tour with Steel Panther, and this time a lot of people in the crowd were there for Inglorious. It was really cool to walk on stage at Hammy O and have five thousand people cheer.

You’ve already mentioned Shepherd’s Bush Empire. On this tour you’ll be playing by far the biggest venues Inglorious have headlined. Are you at all nervous?

Not at all. After you’ve exposed your soul on live reality TV and been judged by the nation [James appeared on The Voice in 2012 and reached the quarter-finals of Andrew Lloyd Webber’s Superstar] you grow a very thick skin.

That’s good, because to some you’re seen as an egomaniac. Back in 2017 you boasted that rock music “needed” a band like Inglorious. Seeing those comments in print, how did you feel?

I felt they were completely fair. Look, I’ve worked my bollocks off for my entire life. You don’t just wake up and sing like I do, it doesn’t just happen. I fully deserve to be where I am and I believe very sincerely that Inglorious should be celebrated.

It sounds like you’re enjoying proving a few people wrong.

Yeah, I am. In the UK we are the only band doing this at our level, so you can either get behind us and support something that’s young and British and good and exciting, or you can sit and moan about the fact that I started out on a reality TV show.

The tour begins on January 28.
The Dandy Warhols
The brains behind Bohemian Like You are coming to town.

Larry ‘Mud’ Morganfield is the eldest son of the late, great Muddy Waters. Just like his father did, the award-winning guitarist and vocalist pays his bills through playing the blues – specifically the old-school Chicago style of the genre’s heyday. A live set from the 64-year-old will be a highlight of the London Blues Week.

Classic Rock seems to ask a lot of children of famous musicians about the potential burdens, but you might have the biggest problem of any of them.

[Laughs] It’s a double-edged sword, man. Dad’s were the biggest shoes to fill, but doing this is all I know. It can be pretty rough, but it gives me the chance to go out there and play for people that might not have heard of my dad.

You didn’t become a professional musician until your father passed away in 1983, by which time you were almost thirty years old. Why was that?

I started late because I had to get me some blues. You can’t sing no blues if you ain’t ever had none [laughs].

Did he pass on any advice to you about your career?

Naaaaw, all he said was to be tougher with people [in a financial sense].

Do you think he’d be proud of you?

No doubt about it, man. Like I said, I play for a bunch of kids who don’t even know him. I give them a glimpse of what it might be like if he was still here. I sing in the same range as him.

Paul Oscher, your father’s harmonica player, once said you were “the closest thing to Muddy I have ever heard”. That’s some compliment.

Yeah, man. That was a great compliment. I’m grateful to my higher power that I can do some of the stuff that dad did.

This will be your first time at London Blues Week. We tried a couple of years back but couldn’t reach an agreement. Hot diggity dog, I’m looking forward to coming.

Why does the blues keep rolling onwards, refusing to die?

There’s a lot of stuff behind it – the slaves in the field, a lot of hurt, and some pleasure, too – but where’s it gonna go? That’s why there’s blues.

Mud Morganfield plays London Blues Week at London's 100 Club on January 19. London Blues Week runs from January 14 to 19.
Francis Dunning
The former It Bites guitarist/vocalist revisits the band’s debut album.

The Cumbria-born guitarist/vocalist, now a long-term resident of the US, plays three UK shows to celebrate his former group It Bites’ 1986 album The Big Lad In The Windmill.

Why are you performing only three shows in the UK? I’m tired of playing towns that don’t support me, because the five thousand dollars per night comes out of my pocket. The music industry that I grew up in is dead and not coming back. Let’s be honest, it’s not the survival of the fittest, it’s the survival of those that can adapt. I’m fortunate to have never been very popular, so I won’t miss it when it finally collapses. Luckily I can play three major cities, sell out, completely and utterly enjoy myself and make some cash. I bet you I have more fun than any band you know.

Now twenty-two years old, how does The Big Lad stand up today? It stands up like a werewolf’s chopper. Cumbrians are the last undiscovered people in the UK. It was music from a lost race. I wish I knew what I know now. We’ve been bigger than Tony Iommi and I could have easily made my child support every month.

Who will be in your band for these shows? Pete Jones is on keyboards because he’s incredibly musical. Luke Machin [of the band Machine] plays guitar because he already knows all the stuff. Paul Brown is on bass because unlike a lot of players you can actually hear him. The drummer is Bjorn Fryklund, who I found online and seems rock enough to sound manly and experimental.

“I will be full-on It Bites music. I’m the best bloke to do me that I know.”

prog enough to play all of the time changes with authenticity. We’re yet to meet, but he’s a Sagittarius so I’m sure he’ll be okay.

How close will the arrangements of the songs be to the original album versions? These live versions will be completely authentic. You can’t do reggae versions of these songs. It will be full-on It Bites music. It’s something I’ve learned to do quite well. I’m the best bloke to do me that I know.

When you heard the newly released five-disc It Bites box set Live In London, which brings together recordings from the Marquee in 1986 to Hammersmith in 1990, on your final tour with the band, what emotions did it generate in you? None at all. It’s like me showing you naked pictures of your ex-wife and wondering you to go: “Phwoooor!” We were fucking intense and some of those shows captured it.

The release of Live In London prompted a fan to plea on your Facebook page for a reunion of the original It Bites – “Pink Floyd did it, and they hate each other…” I don’t hate any of them. I think they are amazing. Great guys, all of them. I have great memories. It was great music from a great band. But no, there won’t be a reunion.

The first date is in Wolverhampton on January 18.

Mastodon
On offer is “a wild evening of intelligent heavy music”.

The American metal giants wrap up the touring of a record made under considerable stress, including family illness, their own health issues and battles with sobriety. Drummer Brann Dailor looks at the past and to the future.

How close did Mastodon come to breaking up during the making of the band’s current latest album, 2017’s Emperor Of Sand? It was never really on the table. Mastodon is the lighthouse that really got us through those past few difficult years, and everything in the last few months as well.

Yes, we were sorry to hear about the death of the band’s manager, Nick John. It’s a nice touch that fans are being invited to donate to cancer charities in his honour.

Nick died of pancreatic cancer and there have been no strides towards a cure for that. It was really brutal way to go, and we loved the guy so much.

Emperor Of Sand was the band’s first full-blown concept album since Crack The Sky in 2009. Mastodon positively thrive as storytellers. Some of my favourite albums are the ones with a tale behind them, such as The Lamb Lies Down On Broadway [Genesis] or Abigail [King Diamond]. It’s great to immerse yourself in a record the way you would a book.

Scott Kelly of Neurosis joins you this time out. What’s his role in the show? We’ll play for over an hour, take a breather and then come back out and do all of the Scott stuff and maybe some other things.

Did Mastodon choose their two support acts, Kvelertak and Mutoid Man? Yeah, we did. If you’re a fan of Mastodon you’re probably into those two bands as well, and having them out on the road with us makes for a wild evening of intelligent heavy music.

With the end of the Emperor Of Sand campaign in sight, are you already making plans for the next record? Yeah. There are a lot of riffs flying around. I don’t want it to be commercial in any way. Let’s go a little bit more experimental.

The tour concludes in Bristol on January 26.
Tour Dates

New Frontier

- 10CC
  - Guildford G Live Mar 1
  - Nottingham Royal Concert Hall Mar 2
  - Worthing Theatre Royal Mar 3
  - Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 4
  - Bournemouth Pavilion Hall Mar 5
  - Cardiff St David's Hall Mar 6
  - Birmingham Symphony Hall Mar 7
  - Manchester Bridgewater Hall Mar 8
  - York Barbican Mar 9
  - Gateshead The Sage Mar 10
  - Glasgow Royal Concert Hall Mar 15
  - Liverpool Philharmonic Hall Mar 16
  - Bristol Hippodrome Mar 17
  - Leicester De Montfort Hall Apr 30
  - Eastbourne Congregate Theatre May 1
  - London Royal Albert Hall May 2

Recommended

- ALICE IN CHAINS, BLACK REBEL MOTORCYCLE CLUB
  - Glasgow Barrowland Mar 22
  - Birmingham Barrowland Mar 23
  - London Shepherd's Bush Empire Jan 20

Matt Andersen

- ATOMIC ROOSTER
  - London Chelsea Under The Bridge Jan 25

Avantasia

- Avatar
  - Glasgow Garage Jan 16
  - Birmingham Institute Jan 18
  - Manchester The Ritz Jan 18
  - Bristol Anson Rooms Jan 19
  - London Shepherd's Bush Empire Jan 26

Kris Barras Band

- CATS IN SPACE
  - Warrington Trench Theatre Mar 27
  - Birmingham Institute Mar 9
  - Manchester Academy 3 Mar 10
  - Nottingham Rescue Rooms Mar 11
  - London Highbury Garage Mar 16

Martin Barre Band

- CELLAR DARLING, BLANKET, APPEARANCE OF NOTHING
  - Sheffield Stubbs Mar 21
  - Cardiff The Globe Mar 21
  - Birmingham Ham & Hounds Mar 24
  - Norwich Waterfront Mar 26
  - Hull Welly Club Mar 27
  - Glasgow O2 ABC Mar 28
  - Dublin On The Roof Mar 29
  - Manchester Academy Mar 30
  - London Camden Jazz Cafe Mar 31

Chelse Blues Rhythm & Rock Festival

- CLIMAX BLUES BAND
  - York Fibbers Feb 20
  - Manchester Factory Feb 21
  - Edinburgh La Belle Angele Feb 22
  - Tees Winter Blues Fest Feb 23
  - Liverpool Philharmonic Hall Feb 24
  - Torquay Tom Point Centre Mar 1
  - Sheffield Greystones Mar 6
  - Stoke-on-Trent Eleven Mar 10
  - Bilston Robin 2 Mar 12
  - London Mannege Street Borderline Mar 17

John Corabi

- Bilston Academy Feb 17
**
- Brighton Concorde 2 Feb 19
  - Manchester Albert Hall Feb 21
  - Cardiff Tramshed Feb 25

Blue Öyster Cult

- Blue Öyster Cult, The Temperance Movement
  - Nottingham UFO Feb 21
  - London Hammersmith Apollo Feb 22
  - Newcastle Academy Feb 23
  - Glasgow Academy Feb 24
  - Leeds Academy Feb 26
  - Birmingham Institute Mar 1
  - Bristol St Philip Gate Mar 28
  - Manchester Academy Apr 1

Joe Bonamassa

- Glasdeg SEC Armadillos Apr 22
  - London Royal Albert Hall Apr 24-26

Nick Mason's Saucerful of Secrets

- BON JOVI, MANIC STREET PREACHERS
  - Liverpool Anfield Stadium Jan 19
  - Manchester The Ritz Jan 20
  - Preston Godollo Feb 26
  - Holmfirth Picturehouse Feb 26
  - Reading Sub 89 Mar 1

Fleetwood Mac, Pretenders

- Birmingham Philharmonic Music Room Jan 23
  - Glasgow St Andrews In The Square Jan 24
  - Birmingham Hare & Hounds Mar 24
  - Manchester Academy 3 Mar 25
  - London Shepherd's Bush Empire Jan 20

Doro

- FRANCIS DUNNERY
  - Wolverhampton Slade Rooms Jan 18
  - Birmingham Club Academy Jan 19
  - Manchester Shepherd's Bush Jan 20

Doro

- BOB DYLAN, NEIL YOUNG
  - London Hyde Park BST Festival Jul 12

Frontiers Rock Festival

- FRONTIERS ROCK FESTIVAL INGLORIOUS, WAYWARD SONS, VEGA, MORE
  - Birmingham Institute Feb 2

The Fuzztones

- Gus G
  - London Camden Underworld Jan 9

Gene Loves Jezebel

- GENE LOVES JEZEBEL
  - Manchester The Factory Jan 11
  - Glasgow Ivory Blacks Jan 12
  - Newcastle Tributes Jan 13
  - Bristol The Fierce Jan 17
  - Bedford Esquires Jan 18
  - London Islington Academy Jan 19

Giants of Rock Festival

- GIANTS OF ROCK FESTIVAL SKID ROW, ROGER CHAPMAN, FM, SWEET, MORE

Good Charlotte

- Good Charlotte
  - London Camden Underworld Jan 17
  - Birmingham Bridgewater Cablesbenef Jan 18
  - Swansea Hangar 18 Jan 19
  - Manchester Rebellion Jan 20
  - London Camden Underworld Feb 22

High on Fire

- High On Fire
  - London High Rock Festival Jul 29

Godsmack

- Godsmack
  - London Kentish Town Forum Feb 27
  - Manchester The Ritz Feb 28
  - Birmingham Institute Mar 1

Good Charlotte

- Good Charlotte
  - London Camden Underworld Jan 17
  - Birmingham Bridgewater Cablesbenef Jan 18
  - Swansea Hangar 18 Jan 19
  - Manchester Rebellion Jan 20
  - London Camden Underworld Feb 22

Mike Lewis

- Mike Lewis
  - London Camden Underworld Jan 17
  - Manchester The Ritz Feb 28
  - Birmingham Institute Mar 1

Me First And The Gimme Gimmes

- Me First And The Gimme Gimmes
  - London Camden Underworld Jan 17
  - Manchester The Ritz Feb 28
  - Birmingham Institute Mar 1

Motorhead

- Motorhead
  - London Camden Underworld Jan 17
  - Manchester The Ritz Feb 28
  - Birmingham Institute Mar 1

Queens Of The Stone Age

- Queens Of The Stone Age
  - London Camden Underworld Jan 17
  - Manchester The Ritz Feb 28
  - Birmingham Institute Mar 1

Saucerful of Secrets

- NICK MASON'S SAUCERFUL OF SECRETS
  - London Roundhouse Mar 1

Set the controls for Syd-era Pink Floyd, and some songs that even Floyd barely touched live during the past 40 years.

See over the page for dates. Currently April 30 and May 1, 3 and 4.
LENNY KRAVITZ

Are you going to go his way? For a live performer like him and some shit-hot tunes it’s worth the trip to East London.

London O2 Arena Jun 11

Glasgow Shepherd’s Bush Empire May 17

Manchester The Ritz May 20, 21

Birmingham Academy May 23

Southampton Guildhall May 24

Edinburgh Usher Hall May 26

York Barbican May 27

Liverpool Olympia May 28

Leicester De Montford Hall May 31

Cardiff Castle Jun 29

Manchester Academy 2 Jun 30

Manchester The Ritz Jul 12

Birmingham O2 Arena Jul 13

Bexleyheath Colne Jul 14

London Hammersmith Apollo Apr 20

London O2 Academy Apr 21

London O2 Academy Apr 22

London O2 Academy Apr 23

Manchester Academy May 2

Nottingham Rock City May 26

Birmingham O2 Academy May 27

Manchester Academy Jun 2

Manchester Apollo Jun 9

London Brixton Academy Jun 13

London Shepherd’s Bush Empire Apr 26, 27

London O2 Shepherd’s Bush Empire Apr 28

London The Forum Apr 29

London O2 Academy Apr 30

London The Forum Apr 31

Manchester Academy May 1

Manchester Arena May 2

Manchester Arena May 3

Manchester Academy May 4

Manchester O2 Academy May 5

Manchester O2 Academy May 6

Manchester O2 Academy May 7

Manchester O2 Academy May 8

Manchester O2 Academy May 9

Manchester O2 Academy May 10

Manchester O2 Academy May 11

Manchester O2 Academy May 12

Manchester O2 Academy May 13

Manchester O2 Academy May 14

Manchester O2 Academy May 15

Manchester O2 Academy May 16

Manchester O2 Academy May 17

Manchester O2 Academy May 18

Manchester O2 Academy May 19

Manchester O2 Academy May 20

Manchester O2 Academy May 21

Manchester O2 Academy May 22

Manchester O2 Academy May 23

Manchester O2 Academy May 24

Manchester O2 Academy May 25

Manchester O2 Academy May 26

Manchester O2 Academy May 27

Manchester O2 Academy May 28

Manchester O2 Academy May 29

Manchester O2 Academy May 30

Manchester O2 Academy May 31

London O2 Academy Jun 1

London O2 Academy Jun 2

London O2 Academy Jun 3

London O2 Academy Jun 4

London O2 Academy Jun 5

London O2 Academy Jun 6

London O2 Academy Jun 7

London O2 Academy Jun 8

London O2 Academy Jun 9

London O2 Academy Jun 10

London O2 Academy Jun 11

London O2 Academy Jun 12

London O2 Academy Jun 13

London O2 Academy Jun 14

London O2 Academy Jun 15

London O2 Academy Jun 16

London O2 Academy Jun 17

London O2 Academy Jun 18

London O2 Academy Jun 19

London O2 Academy Jun 20

London O2 Academy Jun 21

London O2 Academy Jun 22

London O2 Academy Jun 23

London O2 Academy Jun 24

London O2 Academy Jun 25

London O2 Academy Jun 26

London O2 Academy Jun 27

London O2 Academy Jun 28

London O2 Academy Jun 29

London O2 Academy Jun 30

London O2 Academy Jul 1

London O2 Academy Jul 2

London O2 Academy Jul 3

London O2 Academy Jul 4

London O2 Academy Jul 5

London O2 Academy Jul 6

London O2 Academy Jul 7

London O2 Academy Jul 8

London O2 Academy Jul 9

London O2 Academy Jul 10

London O2 Academy Jul 11

London O2 Academy Jul 12

London O2 Academy Jul 13

London O2 Academy Jul 14

London O2 Academy Jul 15

London O2 Academy Jul 16

London O2 Academy Jul 17

London O2 Academy Jul 18

London O2 Academy Jul 19

London O2 Academy Jul 20

London O2 Academy Jul 21

London O2 Academy Jul 22

London O2 Academy Jul 23

London O2 Academy Jul 24

London O2 Academy Jul 25

London O2 Academy Jul 26

London O2 Academy Jul 27

London O2 Academy Jul 28

London O2 Academy Jul 29

London O2 Academy Jul 30

London O2 Academy Aug 1

London O2 Academy Aug 2

London O2 Academy Aug 3

London O2 Academy Aug 4

London O2 Academy Aug 5

London O2 Academy Aug 6

London O2 Academy Aug 7

London O2 Academy Aug 8

London O2 Academy Aug 9

London O2 Academy Aug 10

London O2 Academy Aug 11

London O2 Academy Aug 12

London O2 Academy Aug 13

London O2 Academy Aug 14

London O2 Academy Aug 15

London O2 Academy Aug 16

London O2 Academy Aug 17

London O2 Academy Aug 18

London O2 Academy Aug 19

London O2 Academy Aug 20

London O2 Academy Aug 21

London O2 Academy Aug 22

London O2 Academy Aug 23

London O2 Academy Aug 24

London O2 Academy Aug 25

London O2 Academy Aug 26

London O2 Academy Aug 27

London O2 Academy Aug 28

London O2 Academy Aug 29

London O2 Academy Aug 30

London O2 Academy Aug 31

London O2 Academy Sep 1

London O2 Academy Sep 2

London O2 Academy Sep 3

London O2 Academy Sep 4

London O2 Academy Sep 5

London O2 Academy Sep 6

London O2 Academy Sep 7

London O2 Academy Sep 8

London O2 Academy Sep 9

London O2 Academy Sep 10

London O2 Academy Sep 11

London O2 Academy Sep 12

London O2 Academy Sep 13

London O2 Academy Sep 14

London O2 Academy Sep 15

London O2 Academy Sep 16

London O2 Academy Sep 17

London O2 Academy Sep 18

London O2 Academy Sep 19

London O2 Academy Sep 20

London O2 Academy Sep 21

London O2 Academy Sep 22

London O2 Academy Sep 23

London O2 Academy Sep 24
TOUR DATES
KEVIN NIXON
Birmingham Genting Arena Feb 23
London Wembley Arena Feb 25
Manchester The O2 Arena Feb 28
Reading & Leeds Festivals Aug 24-26

See below for dates. Currently March 9 to April 5.

RECOMMENDS

EVIN NIXON
RIVERSIDE
Dublin Button Factory Mar 14
Belfast Limelight Mar 13
Limerick Dolans Mar 12
Glasgow Barrowlands Feb 5
Leeds Academy Feb 4
Manchester Academy Feb 2
Nottingham Rock City Jan 31
Cardiff St David’s Hall Feb 1
Oxford Academy 2 Feb 23
London Islington Academy Feb 22
Liverpool Arts Club Feb 20
Leeds Brudenell Social Club Feb 17
Manchester Academy 2 Jan 25
Newcastle Academy Jan 14
Reading Hexagon Mar 12

RIVERSIDE
Bristol SWX Mar 21
London SWX Mar 22
Glasgow SWG3 Mar 23
Birmingham The Mill Mar 24

THE STRANGERS, DE FEELGOOD
Dublin Olympia Feb 28
Dublin Olympia Mar 1
Southsea Quid Pro Quo Feb 21
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 21
London Brixton Academy Mar 23
Bournemouth Corn Exchange Mar 24
Bournemouth Academy Mar 25
Brighton Dome Mar 26
Brighton Armadillo Mar 27
Manchester Academy Mar 28
Manchester Apollo Mar 29

THE STRUTS
Birmingham Academy Mar 16
The Sherwood Nottingham Feb 28
Sheffield Leadmill Club Mar 29
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 30

TEDESCHI TRUCKS BAND
London Palladium Apr 27

UK

See below for dates. Currently March 9 to April 5.

CURRENT RIVALS

Recommended

TOUR DATES

RIVAL SONS
Newcastle Northumbria Institute Jan 31
Glasgow Barrowland Feb 4
Manchester Academy Feb 2
Birmingham Academy Mar 24

THE RECOMMENDED CONCERTS

The Revolution
London Shepherd’s Bush Empire Feb 12

TOUR DATES

RIVALS

Newcastle Northumbria Institute Jan 31
Glasgow Barrowland Feb 4
Manchester Academy Feb 2
Birmingham Academy Mar 24

THE RECOMMENDED CONCERTS

The Revolution
London Shepherd’s Bush Empire Feb 12

TOUR DATES

RIVER SIDE
Bristol SWX Mar 21
London SWX Mar 22
Glasgow SWG3 Mar 23
Birmingham The Mill Mar 24

THE STRANGERS, DE FEELGOOD
Dublin Olympia Feb 28
Dublin Olympia Mar 1
Southsea Quid Pro Quo Feb 21
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 21
London Brixton Academy Mar 23
Bournemouth Corn Exchange Mar 24
Bournemouth Academy Mar 25
Brighton Dome Mar 26
Brighton Armadillo Mar 27
Manchester Academy Mar 28
Manchester Apollo Mar 29

THE STRUTS
Birmingham Academy Mar 16
The Sherwood Nottingham Feb 28
Sheffield Leadmill Club Mar 29
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 30

TEDESCHI TRUCKS BAND
London Palladium Apr 27

UK

See below for dates. Currently March 9 to April 5.

CURRENT RIVALS

Recommended

TOUR DATES

RIVALS

Newcastle Northumbria Institute Jan 31
Glasgow Barrowland Feb 4
Manchester Academy Feb 2
Birmingham Academy Mar 24

THE RECOMMENDED CONCERTS

The Revolution
London Shepherd’s Bush Empire Feb 12

TOUR DATES

RIVER SIDE
Bristol SWX Mar 21
London SWX Mar 22
Glasgow SWG3 Mar 23
Birmingham The Mill Mar 24

THE STRANGERS, DE FEELGOOD
Dublin Olympia Feb 28
Dublin Olympia Mar 1
Southsea Quid Pro Quo Feb 21
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 21
London Brixton Academy Mar 23
Bournemouth Corn Exchange Mar 24
Bournemouth Academy Mar 25
Brighton Dome Mar 26
Brighton Armadillo Mar 27
Manchester Academy Mar 28
Manchester Apollo Mar 29

THE STRUTS
Birmingham Academy Mar 16
The Sherwood Nottingham Feb 28
Sheffield Leadmill Club Mar 29
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 30

TEDESCHI TRUCKS BAND
London Palladium Apr 27

UK

See below for dates. Currently March 9 to April 5.

CURRENT RIVALS

Recommended

TOUR DATES

RIVALS

Newcastle Northumbria Institute Jan 31
Glasgow Barrowland Feb 4
Manchester Academy Feb 2
Birmingham Academy Mar 24

THE RECOMMENDED CONCERTS

The Revolution
London Shepherd’s Bush Empire Feb 12

TOUR DATES

RIVER SIDE
Bristol SWX Mar 21
London SWX Mar 22
Glasgow SWG3 Mar 23
Birmingham The Mill Mar 24

THE STRANGERS, DE FEELGOOD
Dublin Olympia Feb 28
Dublin Olympia Mar 1
Southsea Quid Pro Quo Feb 21
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 21
London Brixton Academy Mar 23
Bournemouth Corn Exchange Mar 24
Bournemouth Academy Mar 25
Brighton Dome Mar 26
Brighton Armadillo Mar 27
Manchester Academy Mar 28
Manchester Apollo Mar 29

THE STRUTS
Birmingham Academy Mar 16
The Sherwood Nottingham Feb 28
Sheffield Leadmill Club Mar 29
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 30

TEDESCHI TRUCKS BAND
London Palladium Apr 27

UK

See below for dates. Currently March 9 to April 5.

CURRENT RIVALS

Recommended

TOUR DATES

RIVALS

Newcastle Northumbria Institute Jan 31
Glasgow Barrowland Feb 4
Manchester Academy Feb 2
Birmingham Academy Mar 24

THE RECOMMENDED CONCERTS

The Revolution
London Shepherd’s Bush Empire Feb 12

TOUR DATES

RIVER SIDE
Bristol SWX Mar 21
London SWX Mar 22
Glasgow SWG3 Mar 23
Birmingham The Mill Mar 24

THE STRANGERS, DE FEELGOOD
Dublin Olympia Feb 28
Dublin Olympia Mar 1
Southsea Quid Pro Quo Feb 21
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 21
London Brixton Academy Mar 23
Bournemouth Corn Exchange Mar 24
Bournemouth Academy Mar 25
Brighton Dome Mar 26
Brighton Armadillo Mar 27
Manchester Academy Mar 28
Manchester Apollo Mar 29

THE STRUTS
Birmingham Academy Mar 16
The Sherwood Nottingham Feb 28
Sheffield Leadmill Club Mar 29
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 30

TEDESCHI TRUCKS BAND
London Palladium Apr 27

UK

See below for dates. Currently March 9 to April 5.

CURRENT RIVALS

Recommended

TOUR DATES

RIVALS

Newcastle Northumbria Institute Jan 31
Glasgow Barrowland Feb 4
Manchester Academy Feb 2
Birmingham Academy Mar 24

THE RECOMMENDED CONCERTS

The Revolution
London Shepherd’s Bush Empire Feb 12

TOUR DATES

RIVER SIDE
Bristol SWX Mar 21
London SWX Mar 22
Glasgow SWG3 Mar 23
Birmingham The Mill Mar 24

THE STRANGERS, DE FEELGOOD
Dublin Olympia Feb 28
Dublin Olympia Mar 1
Southsea Quid Pro Quo Feb 21
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 21
London Brixton Academy Mar 23
Bournemouth Corn Exchange Mar 24
Bournemouth Academy Mar 25
Brighton Dome Mar 26
Brighton Armadillo Mar 27
Manchester Academy Mar 28
Manchester Apollo Mar 29

THE STRUTS
Birmingham Academy Mar 16
The Sherwood Nottingham Feb 28
Sheffield Leadmill Club Mar 29
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 30

TEDESCHI TRUCKS BAND
London Palladium Apr 27

UK

See below for dates. Currently March 9 to April 5.

CURRENT RIVALS

Recommended

TOUR DATES

RIVALS

Newcastle Northumbria Institute Jan 31
Glasgow Barrowland Feb 4
Manchester Academy Feb 2
Birmingham Academy Mar 24

THE RECOMMENDED CONCERTS

The Revolution
London Shepherd’s Bush Empire Feb 12

TOUR DATES

RIVER SIDE
Bristol SWX Mar 21
London SWX Mar 22
Glasgow SWG3 Mar 23
Birmingham The Mill Mar 24

THE STRANGERS, DE FEELGOOD
Dublin Olympia Feb 28
Dublin Olympia Mar 1
Southsea Quid Pro Quo Feb 21
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 21
London Brixton Academy Mar 23
Bournemouth Corn Exchange Mar 24
Bournemouth Academy Mar 25
Brighton Dome Mar 26
Brighton Armadillo Mar 27
Manchester Academy Mar 28
Manchester Apollo Mar 29

THE STRUTS
Birmingham Academy Mar 16
The Sherwood Nottingham Feb 28
Sheffield Leadmill Club Mar 29
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 30

TEDESCHI TRUCKS BAND
London Palladium Apr 27

UK

See below for dates. Currently March 9 to April 5.

CURRENT RIVALS

Recommended

TOUR DATES

RIVALS

Newcastle Northumbria Institute Jan 31
Glasgow Barrowland Feb 4
Manchester Academy Feb 2
Birmingham Academy Mar 24

THE RECOMMENDED CONCERTS

The Revolution
London Shepherd’s Bush Empire Feb 12

TOUR DATES

RIVER SIDE
Bristol SWX Mar 21
London SWX Mar 22
Glasgow SWG3 Mar 23
Birmingham The Mill Mar 24

THE STRANGERS, DE FEELGOOD
Dublin Olympia Feb 28
Dublin Olympia Mar 1
Southsea Quid Pro Quo Feb 21
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 21
London Brixton Academy Mar 23
Bournemouth Corn Exchange Mar 24
Bournemouth Academy Mar 25
Brighton Dome Mar 26
Brighton Armadillo Mar 27
Manchester Academy Mar 28
Manchester Apollo Mar 29

THE STRUTS
Birmingham Academy Mar 16
The Sherwood Nottingham Feb 28
Sheffield Leadmill Club Mar 29
Southend-on-Sea Cliffs Pavilion Mar 30

TEDESCHI TRUCKS BAND
London Palladium Apr 27

UK

See below for dates. Currently March 9 to April 5.
Leppard fever has set in. As gaggles of men and women in Hysteria T-shirts exit North Greenwich station, a busker warbles his way through the album we’re here for, and the TFL noticeboard is adorned with a truly terrible poem built around their song titles (“Love Bites and so does a dangerous Animal”, “Tonight’s the night to be Armageddon It…”).

In 2017 Hysteria turned 30, and Team Def Leppard have been celebrating ever since with deluxe reissues and worldwide touring. Now, as 2018 closes, they’ve come to London for their first ever headline show at the O2.

It’s the right time for Leppard to go large. Turbocharged, steroid-pumped and nitpicked with one of the most obsessive producers in the industry – in an era characterised by bottomless budgets – Hysteria also happened to boast fantastic tunes, which turned the Sheffield hopefuls into stars. It earned them a lot of sneering and scoffing as well, though the 25 million-plus sales worldwide presumably take the edge off that.

So they’re playing the whole thing from start to finish, no surprises or tricks. It’s the very definition of ‘giving the people what they want’.

But tonight isn’t just about Leppard. Early birds in the enormous arena are treated to a sparkling opening set from Illinois’s finest, Cheap Trick. As it quickly becomes apparent, if you’re going to throw everything at a massive tour this is who you’d want. “Ladies and gentlemen, please welcome to the stage the best fucking rock band you’ve ever seen,” a woman purrs over the tannoy, as Rick Nielsen, Robin Zander and co. blast into a tight opening trio of gleeful rock’n’roll stomps Hello There, Big Eyes and (Move cover) California Man. Nielsen lobs increasingly generous fistfuls of plectrums into the crowd, and he and Zander command the stage with more high-octane pizzazz than we have any right to expect from two 60-something dudes in slightly weird suit’n’hat combos. In discussions of A-list rock voices that have/haven’t survived the test of time, Zander tends to be rather overlooked. But he ranks among the best tonight, as triumphant in heartfelt power ballad The Flame as the spine-tingingly joyful I Want You To Want Me. Aware that this isn’t ‘their’ crowd, they stick to the stuff everyone knows (Cheap Trick fan or not) and it works like a charm. Surrender and Goodnight bring things careering to an end, and Nielsen moves on from throwing plectrums to (slightly alarmingly) vinyl; hurtling it into the ducking crowd with gusto. Everyone’s cheering heartily by now, so he whips out the five-necked guitar (well, they are opening for Def Leppard after all, who are playing Hysteria in full; clearly now’s the time for five-necked guitars) and we all quietly agree that the bar has been set very high.

Def Leppard / Cheap Trick
London O2 Arena

Joe Elliott and co’s Hysteria victory lap comes to the capital, and there is much... well, hysteria.
And then it’s time. The lights go down, the audience roars, a mash-up of Leppard tunes booms into the darkness, and the curtain lifts to reveal Phil Collen – topless and gleaming like a box-fresh GI Joe – striking the opening notes of Women. We shouldn’t be surprised; Collen hasn’t worn a shirt for more than five minutes since about 1983. Though in fairness, if we were that ripped at 60 we’d want to show it off too. Besides, there are plenty of flashy visuals and close-ups of all of them to draw our gaze in, as the killer first portion of the record gets under way. Rocket, Animal, Love Bites... fucking hell, no wonder Joe Elliott’s literally skipping across the stage, strident frontman poses teleported from his youth in pristine condition.

His wardrobe, however, has been updated (tank tops replaced with tasteful jackets and jeans) while bassist Rick Savage looks pretty much exactly as he did in ‘87. Which is basically what you want when something as rampantly of-its-time as Pour Some Sugar On Me (Leppard’s... ahem, rap-inspired moment) is on the cards. ’Razzle ‘n’ dazzle ‘n’ a flash a little light’, ’You got the peaches I got the cream’... Less Public Enemy, more Vanilla Ice. So magnificently stupid it’s ingenious.

After a robust Armageddon It, a projection of the late, great Steve Clark – Leppard’s gnarlier first guitarist and songwriter, who died at 30 of alcohol poisoning – offers a reminder of the key member and ‘Terror Twin’ who didn’t make it (the other, Collen, quit drinking in the 80s). Other old and new photos of the band, the line-up of which hasn’t changed for 26 years, add a charmingly nostalgic, family photo album-ish effect.

There’s no getting away from the fact that Elliott can only just hit the highest notes these days, but he works round it well - the rest of his range is strong, and the audience are more than happy to join in for those peak-falsetto choruses. And he’s got rock-solid backing. Collen and Vivian Campbell shred with soul, and no matter how many times people point out how impressive a one-armed drummer is, Rick Allen never disappoints.

The final two tracks (which, let’s be honest, are where you’d most likely go to the loo or the bar) bring Hysteria home, before they return for an encore of select highlights from across their career. Well, they steer clear of anything post-90s. But while not having to sit through, say, anything from 2002’s horrifying boyband foray X is a true blessing, they could’ve easily included a track from 2015’s self-titled comeback. Go on fellas, swap the drippy When Love And Hate Collide for Dangerous or Man Enough next time, eh? Still, Wasted is an oomphy treat, Let’s Get Rocked is as joyous as it is brain dead (ie extremely so), and Photograph leaves sugar-high grins in its wake.

There are those who lament bands trading off glories of yore as flagrantly as tonight’s headliners. But when said glories are like those of Def Leppard and Cheap Trick... well, is it really such a bad thing? The mood throughout was celebratory, not stale. Def Leppard might not be relevant to most of the ‘kids’ today, but for the kids inside the 20,000 people at the O2 tonight they remain eternally so.

Words: Polly Glass  Photos: Kevin Nixon
Somehow, The Wildhearts escaped their certain fate. In theory, their short, riotous, firework career should have been blown to smithereens across the skies of rock’n’roll some time in the early 90s. After their tragic death in a Shitsville bedsit gas explosion, their reputation as the best and brightest British Rock’n’roll band of their generation would now be unassailable. And their only full-length album, 1993’s Earth Vs The Wildhearts, would be hailed worldwide as a timeless classic.

Instead, 25 years later we’re here to see the reassembled same line-up perform that album in full, along with a clutch of other great songs from their stuttering, stop-start recording career that followed.

Admittedly the band haven’t survived entirely unscathed; they are but a seven-and-a-half-legged riff machine these days, due to bassist Danny McCormack’s lower limb amputation in 2016, and their original plan to support themselves on this tour as The Moodswingers was scuppered after doctors advised Ginger that his vocal cords might never recover.

Not that he needs to do a great deal in Greetings From Shitsville beyond play the opening bars once they launch into it; the entire first half of the song is belted out by a faithful audience that still stress the rude word in ‘shitville’ as lustily as they did when they were 15.

The moshpit might be less chaotic than it was at their gigs back in ’93, but audience engagement is at an all-time high. So is The Wildhearts’ need to do this. “Really fucking ready for a @thewildhearts show tonight,” Ginger announced on Twitter. “Few demons to expel tonight.”

At first the famously moody frontman seems riled, ranting about the lighting (“It’s like we’re in a fuckin’ porn movie”) as he takes the stage, but not for long. They barely even pause for breath until after a turbo-charged delivery of Caffeine Bomb, by which time he’s charming us with flattering (and frankly inaccurate) observations that we “must have been sperm twenty-five years ago”.

Danny, managing a gallant four songs upright tonight, adds to the sense that this is a band who have somehow cheated the Grim Reaper. In his flat cap, the bassist resembles Brian Johnson after he died and then rose from the grave feeling a little peaky.

When that’s followed by the staccato frenzy of Sucker Punch, you’re reminded that Earth Vs The Wildhearts was one of the great 90s rock albums, bursting with hooks, ideas, wit, energy and arena-sized choruses. It should have been a Hysteria for the great unwashed, but wrong place, wrong time, wrong drugs... Oh well. Just be thankful we can celebrate them, still in one piece (give or take).

As they encore with another half-hour of curios and fan favourites, including Danny stepping up to the mic for Geordie In Wonderland (“gorgeous” is how Ginger rather charitably describes Danny’s voice), we’d much rather be part of this modest but mad-for-it cult. 1995 single I Wanna Go Where The People Go is the belting, joyous finale, confirming that while the people haven’t always reciprocated over the years, it’s their loss. Earth versus The Wildhearts? Not always a fair fight, but tonight we saw a thumping away win.

Johnny Sharp
Killing Joke

London Chalk Farm
The Roundhouse

Post-punk veterans end their 40th anniversary tour in style.

★ Jaz Coleman, his eyes wide open and teeth gritted behind a hideous grimace on a face painted deathly white, is shuddering to such a degree that you’d be forgiven for thinking he was plugged into the mains. All at once there’s drama, tension and menace, and scenes of pandemonium breaking out in front of him... It’s business as usual at the climax of Killing Joke’s 40th anniversary tour.

Despite the rare moments of sentimentality by Coleman or bassist Youth’s heartfelt praise of his bandmates, there’s little tonight that feels like a band performing a victory lap or a roll of honour. Instead this is a continuation of Killing Joke’s 40-year journey into the heart of darkness and the worst aspects of human nature. And with the band having made some of their best music since the turn of the decade, the spread of material tonight covers a satisfying amount of ground.

Delivered at a substantial and punishing volume, Wardance has lost none of its ability to thrill and terrify in equal measure. Geordie’s scything guitars drive the brutality of Eighties, while the mutant techno of European Super State pumps with a hideous relevance.

Unless the apocalypse hits any time soon – and it might – only a fool would bet against Killing Joke making their half-century.

Julian Marzalek

---

Hawklords

London Boston Music Room

★ With one foot in a space-rock past and another in a sci-fi future, the Hawklords have never sounded quite so vital, essential and fiercely contemporary as they do at present. The core of 2018’s incarnation originally came together to pay tribute to the late Robert Calvert in ‘88. Now settled in a formidable guitarist/vocalist Jerry Richards, synth player/vocalist Harvey Bainbridge, bassist/vocalist Tom Ashurst and drummer Dave Pearce, and augmented on this tour by sax-grooving Hawkwind co-founder Nik Turner (78 if he’s a day and showing no signs of returning to Earth), their new seventh album, Brave New World, ranks with the year’s best.

Tonight’s set, still peppered with occasional Calverts (The Aerospaceage Inferno, Ejection), relies mostly on material from BNW (not least a phenomenal Devil In My Head) and 2017’s Six (Nightside), returning to the ‘Wind mothership only for Uncle Sam’s On Mars and a Turner-fronted Master Of The Universe encore. While these ‘Lords are clearly informed by classic ‘Wind mothership only for..."

Dan Reed Network

London 229 Club

A fumbling Reed fails to slam dunk the funk.

★ It’s 30 years – a long time – since Dan Reed and his Network had their heyday, with hits, critical acclaim and audiences falling at his feet, and a lot has happened to him between then and now. What remains from that golden period, of course, is some great songs. Also that wonderful singing voice. What seems to have taken a bit of a hammering, however, is the unshakable confidence and self-assurance that he once had in spades.

Tonight it’s clear that there’s something amiss with Reed’s ‘performance management’. Sound problems right at the off certainly don’t help. But where before if there was a technical hitch he would have engaged with the audience, tonight he croons the old jazz standard All Of Me and looks unsettled. At one point he asks his band: “What are we doing next?” By Rainbow Child the band seem to be getting some momentum going, but then it dissipates when Reed invites keyboard player Rob Daiker to the mic to sing one of his own songs, then disappears off stage.

With Reed back, a great three-song run of One Last Time, Get To You and Tiger In A Dress looks to have put things back on track, but then guitarist Brion James comes to the mic to sing Save The World, Reed slips behind the rear-stage curtain, and with him goes the last chance of pulling some kind of victory from the jaws of, frankly, the bizarre.

Paul Henderson

---

Parquet Courts

London The Roundhouse

Collectivism, autonomy and the chaos dimension.

★ Sometimes a band just comes of age. Which is what happens to Parquet Courts when they blitz the Roundhouse with the most visceral hard-core funk and woozy psychedelia this now gentrified railway shed has witnessed since the golden age of 70s punk rock.

Kicking off with latest album Wide Awake’s irresistible anthem Total Football, inspired in part by the philosophy of Holland’s 1974 World Cup team, the Courts strike out. Drummer Max Savage’s metronomic beat pins Dust to the floor, where it’s swept on by deranged bassist Sean Yeaton, while brother A. Savage and Austin Brown hold a high-level instrumental summit in the brutal thrash medley Almost Had To Start A Fight/In And Out Of Patience that sends the audience crazy. So many tangents at work: the climate-change summit in the brutal thrash medley Almost Had To Start A Fight/In And Out Of Patience that sends the audience crazy.

As of now, Parquet Courts are untouchable.

Max Bell
JOANNE SHAW TAYLOR
THE RECKLESS HEART TOUR
PLUS SPECIAL GUESTS

MARCH 2019
FRI 15 LIVERPOOL O2 ACADEMY
SAT 16 BIRMINGHAM O2 INSTITUTE
SUN 17 MANCHESTER O2 RITZ
TUE 19 CARDIFF TRAMSHED
WED 20 LONDON O2 SHEPHERDS BUSH EMPIRE
THU 21 PORTSMOUTH WEDGWOED ROOMS
SAT 23 CAMBRIDGE JUNCTION
SUN 24 NEWCASTLE BOILER SHOP
LIVENATION.CO.UK • TICKETMASTER.CO.UK

NEW ALBUM
RECKLESS HEART
OUT MARCH 16TH
PRE ORDER NOW

A LIVE NATION PRESENTATION IN ASSOCIATION WITH X-RAY

JOIN MY LIVE NATION FOR EXCLUSIVE BENEFITS. GO TO LIVENATION.CO.UK/REGISTER

A CAREER-SPANNING EVENING WITH TODD RUNDGREN
THE INDIVIDUALIST TOUR

SATURDAY 6 APRIL 2019
EVENTIM APOLLO LONDON

LIVENATION.CO.UK
TICKETMASTER.CO.UK

AVAILABLE NOW ON amazon

A LIVE NATION PRESENTATION
THUNDER

PLEASE REMAIN SEATED

UK TOUR FEB 2019

SUPPORT

DAN REED
Solo Acoustic

Fri 01 Cardiff St David's Hall  Wed 06 Gateshead Sage
Sat 02 Ipswich Regent Theatre  Fri 03 Glasgow Royal Concert Hall
Mon 04 Manchester  Sat 09 Leicester De Montfort Hall
Tues 05 York Barbican  Tue 12 Birmingham Symphony Hall

AEG.COM | TICKETMASTER.CO.UK | THUNDERONLINE.COM

PLEASE REMAIN SEATED – THE NEW ALBUM OUT JANUARY 18TH

THE SPECIALS

ENCORE 40TH ANNIVERSARY TOUR 2019

APRIL
15 / BOURNE SOLD OUT
16 / PORTSMOUTH SOLD OUT
17 / BRIGHTON
19 / PLYMOUTH SOLD OUT
20 / EXETER GREAT HALL
21 / CARDIFF SOLD OUT
23 / BLACKBURN KING GEORGE’S HALL
24 / LEICESTER DE MONTFORT HALL
26 / BIRMINGHAM SOLD OUT
27 / LIVERPOOL SOLD OUT

MAY
01 / CARLISLE BANDS CENTRE
02 / GLASGOW SOLD OUT
03 / NEWCASTLE SOLD OUT
05 / MIDDLESBROUGH SOLD OUT
06 / SCARBOROUGH SPA GRAND HALL
08 / SCUNTHORPE THE BATHS HALL
09 / YORK BARBICAN
10 / SHEFFIELD SOLD OUT
12 / CAMBRIDGE CAMBRIDGE EXCHANGE
13 / SOUTHEND ON SEA TOWN HALL
14 / MARGATE WINTER GARDENS
16 / LONDON O2 ACADEMY Brixton

17 / LONDON O2 ACADEMY BRIXTON

KING CRIMSON

2019

LAST OF THE STREET SURVIVORS – FAREWELL TOUR

WITH SPECIAL GUESTS

STATUS QUO

WEDNESDAY 26 JUNE
GLASGOW THE SSE HYDRO

THURSDAY 27 JUNE
MANCHESTER ARENA

SATURDAY 29 JUNE
LONDON THE SSE ARENA, WEMBLEY

SUNDAY 30 JUNE
BIRMINGHAM BIRMINGHAM ARENA WORLD ARENA

AEGPRESENTS.CO.UK  AEG.COM  TICKETMASTER.CO.UK

AN AEG PRESENTATION IN ASSOCIATION WITH UTA
LOVE FROM STOURBRIDGE

GUEST DJ SET FROM MILES HUNT

FRI 5th APRIL
SHEFFIELD O2 ACADEMY
SAT 6th APRIL
LONDON O2 SHEPHERDS BUSH EMPIRE

FRI 12th APRIL
MANCHESTER O2 RITZ
SAT 13th APRIL
GLASGOW O2 ACADEMY
FRI 19th APRIL
BRISTOL O2 ACADEMY
SAT 20th & SUN 21st APRIL
BIRMINGHAM O2 INSTITUTE

PLUS GUESTS
TAX THE HEAT

MOTT
THE HOOPLE '74

FRI 26 & SAT 27 APRIL 2019
LONDON O2 SHEPHERDS BUSH EMPIRE

SOUTHSIDE JOHNNY
AND THE ASBURY JUKE

FRI 22nd MARCH 2019
LONDON O2 SHEPHERDS BUSH EMPIRE

NATIONAL TOUR
JANUARY 2019
TUE 22nd
MANCHESTER O2 RITZ
WED 23rd
SHEFFIELD O2 ACADEMY
FRI 25th
BRISTOL O2 ACADEMY
SAT 26th
LONDON O2 FORUM KENTISH TOWN
THE GIG CARTEL PRESENTS
KING KING

"THE LIVING, BREATHING, HERE AND NOW OF CLASSIC ROCK" MUSIC NEWS

31 JANUARY NOTTINGHAM ROCK CITY
1 FEBRUARY BIRMINGHAM TOWN HALL
2 FEBRUARY CARDIFF TRAMSHED
7 FEBRUARY LONDON KOKO
8 FEBRUARY SOUTHAMPTON O2 OLD FIRE STATION
9 FEBRUARY BRIGHTON CONCORDE
10 FEBRUARY NORWICH WATERFRONT
15 FEBRUARY MANCHESTER ACADEMY
16 FEBRUARY NEWCASTLE BOILER SHOP
17 FEBRUARY GLASGOW O2 ACADEMY

24 HOUR BOX OFFICE 0844 478 0898
WWW.THEGIGCARTEL.COM WWW.KINGKING.CO.UK

ANA POPOVIC
PLUS SPECIAL GUEST

"ANA POPOVIC IS ONE HEAVY GUITAR PLAYER."
- BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN
"ANA ROCKS THE BLUES IN FINE, FINE FASHION."
- BILLY GIBBONS

UK TOUR MAY 2019
FRI 03 CARDIFF THE GLOBE
SAT 04 CHESTER LIVE ROOMS
SUN 05 MANCHESTER THE DEAF INSTITUTE
TUE 07 WORCESTER THE CLUNY
THU 09 EDINBURGH QUEENS HALL
FRI 10 LONDON RESCUE ROOMS
SAT 11 LONDON BORDERS LINE

24 HOUR BOX OFFICE 0844 478 0898
WWW.THEGIGCARTEL.COM WWW.ANAPOPOVIC.COM

FLEETWOOD BAC
THE FLEETWOOD MAC TRIBUTE SHOW

APRIL 12TH ISLINGTON O2 ACADEMY*
APRIL 13TH BURY ST EDMUNDS APEX*
MAY 10TH BARNESLEY BIRDWELL VENUE
MAY 11TH WHITLEY BAY PLAYHOUSE

*PLUS SPECIAL GUESTS TOO PETTY
A TRIBUTE TO TOM PETTY & THE HEARTBREAKERS

THE GIG CARTEL & PLANET ROCK PRESENTS IN ARRANGEMENT WITH VENUE MANAGERS

FM

SATURDAY
FEBRUARY 16TH
HOLMFIRTH PICTURES DROME

HAYSEED DIXIE

FRIDAY
MARCH 22ND
HOLMFIRTH PICTURES DROME

14TH MAY HOLMFIRTH PICTURES DROME
15TH MAY EDINBURGH QUEENS HALL
17TH MAY BIRMINGHAM O2 INSTITUTE
18TH MAY NORWICH UEA
20TH MAY ST ALBANS ARENA
21ST MAY SALISBURY CITY HALL
23RD MAY LIVERPOOL O2 ACADEMY
24TH MAY NOTTINGHAM ROCK CITY

24 HOUR BOX OFFICE 08444 478 0898 WWW.THEGIGCARTEL.COM

GLENN HUGHES
PERFORMS CLASSIC DEEP PURPLE LIVE
PLUS SPECIAL GUEST LAURENCE JONES

2019 TOUR

THE GIG CARTEL & PLANET ROCK PRESENTS IN ARRANGEMENT WITH VENUE MANAGERS

2019 TOUR
CHASELSEA BLUES FESTIVAL

JETHRO TULL'S MARTIN BARRE BAND

★ STEVIE NIMMO TRIO ★

GUEST BAND TO BE ANNOUNCED

Bourbon Street Revival

DEEP BLUE SEA

CHELSEA UNDER THE BRIDGE

SATURDAY 30TH MARCH 2019 3pm - 11pm

EARLY BIRD Tickets £29 NOW ON SALE

WWW.SOLIDENTERTAINMENTS.COM

FACE VALUE TICKET NO Booking Fee

TEL: 01472 349222 (Mon - Fri 9am - 5pm)

WWW.CHELSEAUBUESFESTIVAL.CO.UK

UK TOUR

MAR 18 BRIGHTON KOMEDIA

TUE 19 BRIDPORT ELECTRIC PALACE

WED 20 MILTON KEYSNS THE STABLES

THU 21 SHEFFIELD GREYSTONES

FRI 22 SCARBOROUGH BLUES FESTIVAL

SAT 23 GLASGOW NICE N NEDDY

SUND 24 KINROSS THE GREEN HOTEL

TUE 25 LONDON O2 CENTRE

WED 27 OXFORD THE BULLINGDON

THU 28 BIRMINGHAM MARQUEE

FRI 29 LONDON THE ATKINSON

SAT 30 BROMSGROVE ARTLINK

TICKETS NOW ON SALE from WWW.SOLIDENTERTAINMENTS.COM

FACE VALUE TICKETS NO Booking Fee TEL: 01472 349222 (Mon - Fri 9am - 5pm)

WWW.CHELSEAUBUESFESTIVAL.CO.UK

HENRIK FREISCHLADER BAND

+ SOUTHBOUND + CONNOR SELBY BAND

OLD SCHOOL TOUR 2019

LONDON UNDER THE BRIDGE

FRIDAY 22ND MARCH 2019 7.30pm

ADV. TICKET £21.00 Available from

WWW.SOLIDENTERTAINMENTS.COM

FACE VALUE TICKET NO Booking Fee TEL: 01472 349222 (Mon - Fri 9am - 5pm)

See ★ gigvit ★ stagroom

LUCCEED THE BLOCKHEADS

STEVIE NIMMO TRIO

NEW PETULIANS GROUNDHOGS

ELLES BAILEY

THREE

LINCOLN DRILL HALL

SATURDAY 11TH MAY 2019 2PM - 10PM

EARLY BIRD Tickets £26 NOW ON SALE LINCOLNBLUESFESTIVAL.CO.UK

OR CALL DEBIT/CREDIT CARD HOTLINE: 01472 349222 (9AM-5PM)

WWW.SOLIDENTERTAINMENTS.COM
Myles Kennedy is among today's finest hard rock vocalists, with both Alter Bridge and with Slash's band Myles Kennedy And The Conspirators. But that shouldn't obscure the varied musical background the singer/guitarist drew on with last year's more stark, autobiographical solo record Year Of The Tiger, or the fact that his first rock band, the Mayfield Four followed two jazz-influenced groups. Kennedy talks Classic Rock through his diverse musical life.

THE FIRST MUSIC I REMEMBER HEARING
Stevie Wonder on Sesame Street, performing Superstition. That may be one of the most memorable experiences I had, period, as a young person. I was about four. I remember thinking: "I don't understand what this is, but this is so cool." I was intrigued, and didn't know what to make of it, but knew that it was something special.

A RECORD I ASSOCIATE WITH MY MUM
When I think about my mum [who raised Kennedy alone from age four after his dad's death], I think about a cassette of songs by [ragtime king] Scott Joplin that had been my late father's, I remember hearing that a lot in the house. For whatever reason, I kept listening to it, years later. My little brother and I loved jazz, and went on to study it at school.

THE BEST LIVE ALBUM
Because I was at the point of my life as a young rock'n'roller when I had started doing my first gigs when I heard it, Iron Maiden's Live After Death. A classmate of mine turned me on to the band one day at lunch, in seventh or eighth grade [aged 12 or 13], and part of what intrigued me was his Eddie T-shirt. It was very compelling for a young person. And the music more than backs up the imagery.

THE FIRST SONG I PERFORMED LIVE
Rock And Roll by Led Zeppelin. I was fourteen, and I was as captivated by Led Zeppelin as I'd been by Stevie Wonder ten years earlier. That fascination had begun around that age, when I heard the intro to Whole Lotta Love. It was a pivotal moment where I stopped what I was doing and went: "What was that?" And then it got to the middle section, with those freaky sex sounds, and it sounded so dangerous and erotic and cool.

MY GUITAR HERO
I always go back to Jimmy Page. Because he's a riff master, and for his ability as a composer; I love that music. I'm sitting here on my day off today and I'm playing blues.

THE BEST RECORD I'VE MADE
The ones that resonate the most with me are when I'm really me laying it out there. This year's solo record, Year Of The Tiger, is one. But also going way back, the second Mayfield Four record, Second Skin. That has a special place for me.

THE WORST RECORD I MADE
Strangely enough, the first Mayfield Four record, Fallout. I should have spent more time writing and recording for that. It taught me that you should have lots of songs. We turned in the demos, and even the A&R guy said: "What do you mean you've only got these fifteen songs? You've got to have many, many, many more to pick the gems from!"

Myles Kennedy

THE SOUNDTRACK OF MY LIFE
Alter Bridge singer and Slash conspirator MYLES KENNEDY on the records, artists and gigs that are of lasting significance to him.

MYベストソニック・インディア
Sturgill Simpson. He's part of this movement of handful of really cool country artists who are taking it back to the country that a lot of us grew up listening to. But he's not just rehearsing that approach, he's pushing the envelope, which he clearly did on his latest record, A Sailor's Guide To Earth. I think Sturgill Simpson is one of the finest songwriters today. It's his lyrics, I listen to a guy who's that poetic and wish I had half his talent.

MY FAVOURITE SINGER
Just for the sound of her beautiful, incredible voice, k.d. lang.

SATURDAY NIGHT SONG
September by Earth Wind And Fire just makes me want to party.

THE SONG THAT MAKES ME CRY
I'm an easy crier when it comes to music. The piece that is my favourite, but I almost can't listen to it because I will sob within the first few bars, is Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concert In C-minor. It's so beautiful, haunting and heartbreaking. Even talking about it is getting me a little broken up.

THE GREATEST ALBUM OF ALL TIME
What's Going On by Marvin Gaye. Not just because it's a good record, but also because he took a huge chance. [Motown Records executive] Berry Gordy didn't want him to make a socially conscious record, but at that point in the world we needed a record like that. Frankly we could do with a record like that right now.

MY FAVOURITE SONGWRITER
Paul McCartney. His melodic sensibility is something that's always been a future. I think he and The Beatles will be remembered in the same way we remember Mozart.

THE SONG I WANT PLAYED AT MY FUNERAL
I have thought that far ahead. I want All You Need Is Love by The Beatles. I don't want it to be a sombre affair. I want that truth to be sung. I agree with it. I've seen what that four-letter word does at first hand. Meeting my wife and what she has done for me as a human being, and ultimately the love that she gave me, saved me. Did she open up something in me, and let me love? Absolutely, I'd gone in a hole, and had become very doubtful that anything like that actually existed, outside of family. I'd become jaded, and she made me aware that love's very real.

Year Of The Tiger is out now via Napalm Records.

"The Beatles will be remembered in the same way we remember Mozart."
SHOCK CITY PRODUCTIONS PRESENTS

EDEN'S CURSE

AS SEEN ON TOUR WITH:
MICH AEL
SCHENKER
FEST

Plus Special Guests
MOB RULES & degre9d

14 APR - THE UNDERWORLD, LONDON
15 APR - TRILLIANS ROCK BAR, NEWCASTLE
16 APR - THE YARDBIRDS, GRIMSBY
17 APR - ELEVEN, STOKE
18 APR - THE ROBIN 2, BILSTON
19 APR - CORPORATION, SHEFFIELD
20 APR - MUNI ARTS CENTRE, PONTYPRIDD
21 APR - THE GARAGE G2, GLASGOW

TICKETS ON SALE NOW FROM WWW.EDENSCURSE.COM